Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. CHACE] is absent from the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA. I desire to add to the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island the further statement that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] was paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. As the Senator from Oregon desired to vote on this question the pair was transferred to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], so that the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Rhode Island are paired on this question.

Mr. BOWEN. I understand that my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] has been transferred, and in that case I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER (after having voted in the negative). I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] if he knows how his colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] would vote on this question?

Mr. GEORGE. He would vote "yea" on this proposition. He told me he was paired with you, and would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] left the Chamber a while ago and announced to me that he was paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], and that he would vote against the amendment if present.

Mr. BECK (after having voted in the affirmative). I thought the Senator from Maine was here. I asked him to pair with me when I left the Senate a little while ago to go to the other House. If he is not here I withdraw my vote; I am paired. I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay" if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Berry,	Fair,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	George,	Morrill,	Vest,

Dawes,	Hawley,	Pike,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for half an hour at least.

Mr. CAMERON. I think I shall have to insist on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 32, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Beck,	Cockrell,	Harris,	Pugh,
Berry,	Coke,	Hearst,	Ransom,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 5, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a correction of the Journal in regard to the action last night on House bill No. 1171, providing for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces. The Journal states that the bill was withdrawn. By the RECORD it is shown that it was not withdrawn, but was laid aside by consent to retain its place on the Calendar.

It will be found in the RECORD on page 4170, as follows:

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be laid aside.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected. It makes, of course, very considerable difference whether the bill was merely laid aside or withdrawn. The Journal will be corrected so that it will read that the bill was laid aside to retain its place upon the Calendar.

The remainder of the Journal was then read and approved.

ARMAMENT OF NEW STEEL CRUISERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with an inclosure, an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy of an appropriation to supply deficiency for the armament of new steel cruisers; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FORT HAMILTON, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War for the purchase of additional ground at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MINT BUILDING, NEW ORLEANS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with inclosures, letters from the Supervising Architect relative to the cost of repairs of the mint building, New Orleans, La., and of the old portion of the custom-house, Buffalo, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Supervising Architect urging the immediate appropriation of $10,000 for repairs and preservation of the marine hospital; also referring to estimate heretofore submitted for repairs and preservation of public buildings for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SANITARY IMPROVEMENTS, TREASURY BUILDING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with accompanying reports, a letter from the chief clerk of that Department, submitting an estimate of an appropriation to place the building of the Department in proper sanitary condition; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL LAWS, UTAH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the secretary of the Territory of Utah, inclosing copies of the laws of that Territory enacted at the last session of its Legislative Assembly; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories.

WITNESSES' MILEAGE, ETC., IN NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting, with inclosure, a letter from the United States attorney for New Mexico relative to the inadequacy of witnesses' mileage and per diem compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

WILLIAM LAVERY VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in that court in the case of William Lavery vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were read twice, and referred to the appropriate committees, as follows:

A bill (S. 304) to compensate physicians for services rendered under an order of the United States court of the northern district of Alabama—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 433) to provide for the payment of the legal representatives of Arvah Hopkins of the rent of certain property in Tallahassee, Fla., for the use of the Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 542) for the relief William Erwin—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 972) for the relief of Thomas P. Morgan, jr.—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1258) for the relief of Mary A. Lewis, widow of Joseph N. Lewis—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2136) for the relief of Edward Fenlon—to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GALLINGER, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. SCRANTON, for four days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, by unanimous consent leave was granted to withdraw from the Committee on Military Affairs papers filed in connection with House bill 7183.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. THOMAS R. HUDD, of Wisconsin, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Joseph Pulitzer.

GENERAL-SERVICE ARMY CLERKS.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent to make a verbal correction in an amendment to the bill (H. R. 7191) to provide for the enlistment and pay and to define the duties and liabilities of "general-service clerks" and "general-service messengers" in the Army which was passed by the House last evening.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

In line 13, in the second section, strike out the words "class one" and insert "class three."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

ESTATE OF JAMES G. WINTERSMITH.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 112) for the relief of the estate of the late James G. Wintersmith, late Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, and that the House consider the same.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, and the accounting officers of the Treasury to pass the said account, to the legal representatives of the late James G. Wintersmith, late Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, one year's salary as Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, and also the expenses of the last sickness and burial of the said Wintersmith.

The Committee on Accounts recommended the following amendment:

In line 9, before the word "burial," insert the words "expenses of."

After the word "burial" insert the words "not exceeding five hundred dollars for said burial."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I send to the desk the report by the Committee on Accounts. I desire to make this single statement as a reason for calling up the resolution this morning. Major Wintersmith, the father of the late Doorkeeper, since that report was made by the committee, has lost his wife and on yesterday his only remaining son and child. It seemed to me not inappropriate that the House this morning might give to the stricken man, who is now old and poor as well as widowed and childless, the passage of this bill as a sort of message of condolence. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF JEROME S. RIDLEY.

Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR. I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts. I am directed by the committee to report back with amendments the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, to Jennie Caruthers and Henrietta Ridley, children and heirs of Jerome S. Ridley, late an employé of the House, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the necessary funeral expenses, not to exceed $250.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In the last line of the resolution strike out the words "necessary funeral." Insert after the word "expenses" the words "of his last illness and funeral."

Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

That the Committee on Accounts, having had under consideration the accompanying resolution, report the same back with the following amendment: In the fifth line, strike out the words "necessary funeral" and insert, after the word "expenses," the words "of his last illness and funeral" with a recommendation that it do pass. The deceased was clerk of the Committee on Private Land Claims, having been appointed on the 11th day of January, 1886, and was a very faithful and intelligent employé. He died quite suddenly on the 6th day of April, 1886, leaving no estate. His children, named in the resolution, were dependent upon him for their support. The allowance proposed to be made by this resolution is the usual allowance made by the House in case of the death of any of its employés. There is a long line of precedents without a single interruption in support of the passage of the resolution.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resotion was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar, for immediate consideration, Senate bill 632, to provide for the settlement of the estates of the deceased Kickapoo Indians in the State of Kansas, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill indicated by him, and to consider the same. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds upon the House Calendar a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue duplicates of certain land warrants lost while in possession of officers of the Government. The bill has evidently gone to the House Calendar by mistake. As a private bill it clearly belongs to the Private Calendar, and the change will be made.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, by the prior order of the House, this day and this evening have been set apart for business to be presented by the Committee on Military Affairs. Upon consultation with them and with their consent, I ask unanimous consent of the House that to-morrow and to-morrow evening be substituted for this day and evening for the consideration of that business; my purpose being to get a vote to-day on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BEACH. I object to that. To-morrow is assigned for the consideration of the electoral count bill.

Mr. WILLIS. The electoral count bill is subject to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire, if possible, to insure the consideration of the electoral count bill either to-morrow or the next day. Friday I know is private bill day, and I desire if I can to get unanimous consent to go on with the consideration of the electoral count bill to-day, as I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that it is possible we may get through with his bill to-day in time to let us take up and secure at least the partial consideration of the electoral count bill. I do not wish to interpose any objection in the way of the river and harbor bill, and I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] to withdraw his objection, but I trust that we can make an arrangement which will insure the consideration of the electoral count bill to-day after the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] asks unanimous consent that the order for this day and evening, the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, be postponed until to-morrow and to-morrow evening.

Mr. BEACH. I object.

REPORTS OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read. [It is printed below.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, how does this come before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is a report from the Committee on Printing in relation to printing for the use of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] that the Committee on Appropriations have received a communication from the Public Printer touching this matter. I understand the report relates to animal industry.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The report is in reply to an inquiry which the Committee on Printing was directed to make in reference to the report on animal industry.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought it had reference to that matter.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The report and the accompanying papers, which the Chair supposes furnish the information desired by the House, will be printed.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that the report and the papers be read, in order that they may go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That will not take them into the RECORD.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. They will be printed as adopted in the usual form of committee reports.

Mr. BARKSDALE. But I wish them to go into the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the report just submitted by him from the Committee on Printing, with the accompanying papers, be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report and accompanying papers are as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 4, 1886.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following; which was agreed to:

"Whereas a joint resolution of the Congress of the United States, approved July 5, 1884, directed the printing of 50,000 copies of the first annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, 10,000 copies of which were for the use of the Senate and 35,000 for the use of the House of Representatives; and

"Whereas it is stated that only 2,000 copies of said report have been delivered to the Senate and only 285 have been delivered to the House of Representatives, and that no delivery has been made to either branch for about a year: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the cause of this delay and to report by bill or otherwise."

Attest:

JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution of inquiry relating to the printing of 50,000 copies of the first annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, ordered by resolution dated July 5, 1884, and stating that only a limited number of the copies of the report so ordered had been delivered, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following communication from the Public Printer explaining the cause of the delay in printing the whole number and exonerating him from neglect of duty in executing the order. The committee therefore, in view of the facts stated, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the said resolution, and that the same be laid on the table:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., May 4, 1886.

SIR: Your letter of this date, inclosing the following resolution adopted by the House of Representatives, has been received:

"IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 3, 1886.

"Whereas a joint resolution of the Congress of the United States, approved July 5, 1884, directed the printing of 50,000 copies of the first annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, 10,000 copies of which were for the use of the Senate and 35,000 for the use of the House of Representatives; and

"Whereas it is stated that only 2,000 copies of said report have been delivered to the Senate and only 285 have been delivered to the House of Representatives, and that no delivery has been made to either branch for about a year: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the cause of this delay and to report by bill or otherwise."

In answer thereto, I beg to say that Congress ordered 50,000 copies of the first report on Animal Industry, but failed to make the necessary special appropriation with which to execute the order. Such being the case, the cost must necessarily be charged to the general appropriation for Congress.

The general appropriation for the present fiscal year was reduced $250,000 below the previous appropriation for long session and $426,107 below the estimates of this office.

The press facilities of this office are not sufficient to do all the printing ordered, and work on a number of reports was necessarily postponed, among them this one. With the reduced appropriation the presses can not run extra, and I have been compelled, first, to provide the current work for Congress and the Departments and print such reports as could be reached thereafter.

I did print a small edition for the accommodation of the Department of Agriculture (as in several other cases) and the deliveries were as follows: Senate, 2,516; Department of Agriculture, 4,833; House, 472.

The circular issued by the honorable Commissioner of Agriculture which you send me contains one paragraph which needs an explanation. He says:

"I deem it my duty to state these facts in order to relieve this department of any responsibility for what seems to be an unreasonable and unwarranted delay in the delivery of a report which Congress provided for nearly two years ago."

It is true that Congress did order this work printed, but it is equally true that no special appropriation was made therefor; hence it will be observed that the Commissioner's statement that "Congress provided for" its publication is misleading and calculated to do this office an injustice, which of course was unintentional.

The Public Printer intends to comply with the law and will not exceed appropriations, and if orders are made for which no special appropriation is provided, such printing must inevitably wait until it can be reached from the general appropriation for Congress.

In conclusion, therefore, I beg to say that the first report on animal industry has not been completed, because:

First. No special appropriation was made for its publication, as was the case of the second annual report of the same work; and

Second. The general appropriation was reduced $250,000 compared with the previous long session, and $426,107 less than the estimates for the year (being the same amount as was provided for the short session of Congress with four months' less expenditures for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and other current Congressional work), which, with the limited press facilities, made it absolutely necessary to postpone printing the first report.

It should be remembered that a certain sum of the general appropriation is allotted for the various Executive Departments, and that the current printing for the daily use of Congress and its committees must have precedence over all annual and other reports. The reduction of the appropriation without a corresponding reduction of the orders for printing inevitably leads to the postponement of the work.

I have been very much embarrassed by this state of affairs, and have endeavored to oblige Congress and all the Departments of the Government. Instead of a reduction of printing, the demands upon this office during this session are much larger than ever before.

Very respectfully,

S. P. ROUNDS, Public Printer.

Hon. E. BARKSDALE,
Chairman Committee on Printing,
House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the regular call of committees for reports be dispensed with, and that the Chair recognize such gentlemen as desire to submit reports.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably a House resolution fixing a day for the consideration of business from the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, also reported back favorably a House resolution fixing a day for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. HERBERT. I am instructed by the Joint Commission on the Signal Service, Geological Survey, &c., to report, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 8320, recently reported, a bill restricting the work and publications of the Geological Survey, and for other purposes. This proposed substitute is accompanied with a written report giving the reasons in favor of the measure. The committee will make a further report in a few days.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose to report a substitute for a bill already reported?

Mr. HERBERT. For a bill already reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no practice which authorizes that proceeding. The substitute is a mere amendment, and can be offered by authority of the committee when the bill comes up.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask then unanimous consent that this proposed substitute, with the accompanying report, be printed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. RANDALL. This substitute and report I understand relate to the Geological Survey?

Mr. HERBERT. The Geological Survey. As I have stated, the committee will soon make report on the other matters which they have had under consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. What may we understand by the word "soon?"

Mr. HERBERT. We hope to report during the present week.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the order for printing as requested by the gentleman from Alabama will be made.

FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. ELDREDGE, by unanimous consent the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of bills of the following titles; and the same were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

A bill (S. 1570) granting a pension to Mary Ann Vars; and

A bill (H. R. 1571) granting a pension to Abbie M. Hay.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 6556) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Henry Ellis;

A bill (H. R. 3062) for the relief of James Cunningham;

A bill (H. R. 4548) to authorize the President to commission and retire from active service John R. Bailey, acting assistant surgeon United States Army, in the grade of major and surgeon United States Army;

A bill (H. R. 6524) to appoint Charles V. Petteys an assistant surgeon on the retired-list of the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. 4666) for the relief of the heirs of Christopher Cott;

A bill (H. R. 2597) for the relief of G. W. McCullough;

A bill (H. R. 6594) for the relief of Martha Smith;

A bill (H. R. 2314) for the relief of Francis M. Kirby, and to amend his military record;

A bill (H. R. 6198) to remove the charge of desertion against David Croys;

A bill (H. R. 3072) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Wade H. Newman;

A bill (H. R. 6636) for the relief of Manley B. Edmunson;

A bill (H. R. 5072) to correct the muster-roll of Company B, Fortieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, as to the name of Jesse N. Oren, late orderly sergeant of said company;

A bill (H. R. 6209) for the relief of George A. Cassedy; and

A bill (H. R. 6555) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Jonathan C. Grumbling.

GEORGE LEMON.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. If there are no other reports, the next business in order is the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

VETERAN BOUNTIES.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer Army, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all soldiers of the late war who re-enlisted as veteran volunteers, and afterward were discharged to receive promotion and receive commissions as officers in the Army, shall be paid all installments of veteran bounty which were withheld from them on account of their being so commissioned and mustered, the same as they would have been entitled to receive had they completed their term of enlistment without promotion and received an honorable discharge: Provided, That all soldiers of the late war who were discharged to receive promotion prior to their re-enlistment as veterans shall be entitled to receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they served as enlisted men for the full term of their enlistment and received an honorable discharge: Provided further, That all volunteer soldiers or sailors of the late war who were honorably discharged on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty shall receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they been discharged on account of wounds.

SEC. 2. That all advance payments of bounty, or balances of the same, which were deducted from the pay of either class of enlisted men herein referred to, by reason of their having been discharged for promotion, after having re-enlisted as veterans, or without re-enlistment and prior to a service of two years, shall be repaid to such as are entitled thereto by the provisions of this act; and in case of the death of the officer or soldier entitled to the benefits of this act, the amount of money found due him shall be paid to his widow, heirs, or legal representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums due in each individual case.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, that bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] makes the point of order that this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] has charge of the bill.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that, under the rule, the bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman can not make the motion as stated by him, but he can ask unanimous consent to have the bill considered in the House.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer army, and for other purposes.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, it is not the desire of the Military Committee to provoke unnecessary discussion upon this measure, and I will endeavor to confine myself to a brief statement in explanation of the bill. Those of the House who served in the Army of the United States during the late war are aware that in 1863, under General Order 191 of the War Department, all soldiers who had served two years and over were invited by the Government to re-enlist, and one of the inducements to re-enlist was set forth in paragraph 3 of that order, which I now read:

Every volunteer enlisted and mustered into the service as a veteran under this order shall be entitled to receive from the United States one month's pay in advance, and a bounty and premium of $402.

The class of men affected by this bill are those who for gallantry after they re-enlisted as veterans were promoted to be officers of the volunteer forces. Upon such promotion the Government terminated the contract which springs from the paragraph of the order which I have read, and ceased to pay those men any portion of the bounty, which by that order it had agreed to pay. Not only did the Government do this, but from the sums of money in the nature of bounty previously paid to those soldiers while in the ranks of the Army they deducted the sum of $25 in each case. The position of the committee on this point is that the contract between the soldier and the Government became an executed contract upon his re-enlistment in the service of the United States, and that therefore it was beyond the power of the Government to terminate the contract by its action. The Secretary of War in terminating the contract used this language:

Paragraph 3 of the General Order 191 is construed by the War Department not to apply to the following cases: First, those discharged during enlistment by way of favor; and second, those discharged after re-enlistment by way of punishment.

A strange confusion of the rights of men, where excess of valor receives the same award which falls upon the excess of ignominy! The result of this construction (because it rests in construction alone) was that a large number of those who, after re-enlistment, were promoted, were so promoted within ninety days of the termination of the war and of their term of enlistment under the veteran contract, and as a consequence they became, under the construction of the War Office, not entitled to three months' pay proper allowed to officers, and they also lost the bounty which the Government had agreed to pay them. As a consequence, they accepted their promotion at striking financial cost to themselves. The second class named in this bill are those who prior to the expiration of two years from the date of their enlistment were promoted, and whom the Government deprived of the $100 bounty guaranteed them under the terms of enlistment, and who, if this bill becomes a law, will be entitled to receive the same bounty that they would have received had they performed their service to its conclusion and received an honorable discharge.

Another class of deserving soldiers affected by this bill and who suffered injustice, as we contend, consists of those who were discharged prior to the expiration of two years' service for disabilities not resulting from wounds. All soldiers who were discharged on account of wounds, who belonged to the three-years' army prior to re-enlistment, were paid $100 bounty, the same as they would have been paid had they continued their term of service to its conclusion and been honorably discharged. But those who were discharged prior to the expiration of two years, and not on account of disabilities from wounds, were, by the construction of the War Office and its accounting officers, deprived of the $100 which should have gone to them under the contract of enlistment. These are the three classes affected by this measure.

Mr. SOWDEN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether the $402 bounty payable under this general order was payable immediately on re-enlistment as a veteran, or payable in installments; and if so, how?

Mr. LAIRD. It was payable in installments. Immediately on re-enlistment the veteran receives $13, being one month's pay, and also $25 as the first installment of bounty, and a premium of $2, making $40. On the first regular pay-day thereafter $50 was paid, and so payments were made at intervals of four months until the whole of the balance had been paid.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Nebraska inform the House what is the aggregate amount which it is estimated will be required to make the payments under this bill?

Mr. LAIRD. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky, I will say I have consulted with the Adjutant-General; and he states it will be impossible to determine even during this session of Congress with any degree of accuracy what the amount will be. I have made an estimate which I think approximates to some degree of accuracy, but of course it is only an estimate. There were received into the service of the United States for three years some two million two hundred and fifty thousand troops. This bill will affect, so far as the veterans are concerned, only those who had rendered two years or more of service.

There were, as nearly as I can determine, five hundred regimental organizations that veteranized. Taking a full regiment of ten companies, the line officers (and this is confined to line officers almost exclusively) would be thirty to the regiment, if it had the full complement. But every gentleman conversant with the service knows, of course, that as a matter of fact at the time of veteranizing and immediately thereafter, or within the time when the rule allowing promotions for veteran enlistment was operative, the regiments were so decimated that sometimes—and this was the case in my own brigade—it took fifteen regiments to make up a brigade of fifteen hundred men. It was not uncommon, near the close of the war, to find in our Army regiments having less than one hundred men behind the colors. I take it then to be a fair estimate to say that five hundred officers of this class will be affected by this bill. I assume that an average of about $200 per man will become due upon the passage of the bill. This would make the amount to go to veteran officers under the bill something like $100,000.

Then there are the officers who were promoted in the three-year service, and the enlisted men who were discharged, not on account of wounds and prior to a service of two years. These two classes, I take it, would scarcely make up $100,000 more, according to the estimates I have.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. How do you get at the last class?

Mr. LAIRD. So far as the officers are concerned, I get the result by the same system of reasoning which I have stated to the House in connection with the others.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. How do you get an estimate of those discharged on account of disability?

Mr. LAIRD. I get at that from conversation with the auditing officers of the Government as to the number of cases that have arisen in their experience where applications have been made for this bounty upon the assumption by the soldier that he was entitled to it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But does the gentleman suppose that the number of soldiers discharged on account of disability and who believed themselves entitled to the bounty bears any large proportion to the number of soldiers discharged on account of disability who did not labor under such delusion?

Mr. LAIRD. I think not; that is my experience from the investigation I have been able to give the matter.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then the gentleman's idea is that this bill will carry about $200,000 or $300,000?

Mr. LAIRD. From $200,000 to $300,000 is what the bill will carry, I think.

Mr. BLAND. Have any estimates been made by the Department at all?

Mr. LAIRD. The committee has made the estimate I have stated.

Mr. BLAND. Does any estimate accompany the report?

Mr. LAIRD. No, sir; because at the War Office we have been told that with the present force they can not give us an estimate.

Mr. BLAND. Then the War Office is unable to give any estimate as to the amount of money required?

Mr. LAIRD. They can give no accurate estimate.

Mr. BLAND. Then it is mere guess-work, I suppose, as to the amount?

Mr. LAIRD. The gentleman may call it so, if he pleases.

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that there is nobody on this side of the House who will object to the passage of this bill on the ground of the loyalty of the beneficiaries; and I take it there is no gentleman on the other side who will object on the ground that the Government did not get full consideration for the money it is now asked to pay.

Mr. McCOMAS. Let me ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether the ground was not that promotion from the ranks was based on favor and not on merit, which was the real fact.

Mr. LAIRD. I can not say what may be the position of the other people.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is, that the meritorious soldier who rose from the ranks was deprived of bounty, although he had merit, on the technical ground promotion was given by favor.

Mr. LAIRD. I think you are correct.

Mr. McCOMAS. A system injurious to good discipline and proper management by the War Department.

Mr. LAIRD. I move the committee rise for the purpose of going into the House to limit debate on this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope not.

Mr. LAIRD. I give notice I will call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move to report the bill favorably to the House?

Mr. LAIRD. Yes; if no gentleman desires to debate it further I move the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hardly think it is fair the gentleman should move to rise and report the bill to the House when a statement has only been made on one side of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question on the motion to rise for the purpose of going into the House to limit debate.

Mr. REAGAN. We ought not to be asked to put this bill upon its passage until we have had some statement from the War Department.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, I admit I do not understand this bill. I have been reproached on a previous occasion with having voted against an increase of pension to widows. I could not plead ignorance on that occasion; I knew exactly what I was doing. I knew that bill proposed to take away the hard earning of some widows and give it to other widows. To me all widows are alike. I am like Tony Weller, rather inclined to beware of them. [Laughter.]

I was told during my absence from the House I was attacked by some gentlemen on the other side and consigned to a very bad place. I am not quite sure I was not invited to take a trip to regions which are not popular inside this House or out of it.

Mr. BRAGG. But supposed to be quite populous, are they not? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEWITT. I do not know how those regions are tenanted, and I trust I never shall know; but so far as I am concerned, if I expect to keep out of them, it will be by trying to do my duty frankly and fearlessly in this House.

I remember standing at the corner of the Speaker's desk when the bill giving arrears of pensions was under consideration by this House, and I heard the question put to the gentleman in charge of that bill [Mr. RICE], as it has been put here to-day by my friend from Kentucky to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], what will the bill cost? And the answer was, after the most careful computation, it could not exceed $20,000,000. And yet under that bill some hundreds of millions of dollars have been paid out of the Treasury, and I suppose hundreds of millions more will have to be paid. I did not vote for that bill. I was told it would not be safe for me to go home to my district. I have never heard of it in my district. I went back. I have been often a candidate before them since, and no man has ever reproached me with that vote.

And I now say here, whether I shall be a candidate or not for office, I am prepared to take the responsibility of saying that it is time to call a halt on these bills giving untold sums from the Treasury of the United States which can only be got out of the "coined sweat," as my friend from West Virginia called it—out of the coined sweat of the laboring men of the country. We have not any money to give away. The working people of this country are to-day in the presence of starvation. The avenues for work are being closed up, and closed, as I believe, mostly as the result of overtaxation.

Should not this House address itself to the work of reducing taxes? Twenty-five dollars a year taken out of a single family may not seem large to those gentlemen who are so ready to empty the contents of the United States Treasury into the streets, and yet to the man who earns his living $25 a year represents the difference between comfort and misery.

I know that men from the South are placed by these bills in a most embarrassing situation. They can not discuss them without having imputations thrust upon their loyalty as I heard them uttered to-day, if the remark of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] had any meaning at all. I confess I was stirred—if I understood that remark—stirred with indignation that it should be made impossible for these gentlemen on this side to do their duty here and vote without having a reproach cast in their teeth. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I have taken the floor. No man can reproach me with want of loyalty, or my people with want of a disposition to make sacrifices for those who suffered or made personal sacrifices in their country's defense.

But the burden has become intolerable. It is time somebody may speak out here. I care not what the consequences may be to me personally; but I warn gentlemen that we must stop depleting the Treasury of the Government of its contents on one pretense or another for the benefit of those who are not laboring for an honest living, or if they are laboring for it do not need the bounty we are so ready to pour into their laps. I say it in justification of the men I believe to be as generous, as liberal, as honorable as any men I have ever known in the course of my life. I have seen them come up and vote for these bills, vote for every measure of justice to the Union soldier; and what is to be regretted I have seen them forced to give their assent to other measures which in the better days of this Republic, when the Constitution was better understood and respected than it is now, would have had no place here. I have seen them come into this House and advocate and vote for these measures on the ground that it was the only way in which they could get back into the South any portion of the money for which they are so relentlessly taxed.

It is the only way for them to get even, and I do not blame these gentlemen for advocating river and harbor measures and educational bills, as well as other bills which I feel constrained to oppose, for they are taxed in their property, in their destitution, in the loss of everything except honor, and they are compelled to pay their share of the money which is distributed among the Union soldiers.

Has not the hardship been enough? Has not the humiliation been sufficient? Were they not crushed to the earth? Why, I know members of this House who, when the war closed, knew not whence the bread was to come for their wives and their children for one week ahead. Were they not sufficiently crushed and humiliated then? And yet they have come up manfully to all their obligations, though their mouths are closed; and it is not honest or honorable to press these measures upon people who are not able to either express their dissent or to give negative votes in silence.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEWITT. I will answer questions if the gentleman desires to ask them.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York what there is dishonest or dishonorable in pressing this particular measure?

Mr. HEWITT. The limit of endurance on the part of the tax-payers of this country has been reached, and it is breaking out in riots and death and dynamite, and it will not stop until the pressure—the heavy load of taxation—is removed. That is the reason why I feel constrained on this occasion to call the attention of my Northern colleagues to the fact that the limit has been reached, and that unless we stop now and refuse to vote for these bills that abstract in the dark from the Treasury of the United States the honest proceeds of labor, it will be impossible to maintain order in this country. The question to-day is social order at all costs, at all hazards; it must be maintained. It is better to have bad law than no law; it is better to have tyranny than anarchy; and it is the reckless appropriations of money which has forced this issue upon the people of the United States. This House should address itself to measures of relief, to the reduction of taxation, and to the opening of the avenues for the employment of labor.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question? If this is the prime necessity here—the reduction of taxation—why does not the gentleman and his large majority on that side do it?

Mr. HEWITT. That is exactly one point of my remarks. The Democrats of this House have a majority. There is a bill pending in this House which will reduce taxation twenty-five millions. I know that efforts have been made to prevent the consideration and passage of that bill; and I will go with the gentleman from Iowa in sackcloth and ashes, if necessary, in order to make atonement for the failure of this House and of my party and of my administration to fulfill the pledges they made to the people when they asked for their votes and received the verdict which placed them in power. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we shall be traitors to every obligation which we assumed, and to every duty which we are sent here to fulfill, unless we walk squarely up to the settlement of that great question; and instead of imposing taxation by making new appropriations of the public money, we shall reduce taxes and lighten the heavy load now pressing grievously upon the shoulders of this people. [Applause.]

Mr. BRAGG and Mr. HISCOCK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is recognized.

Mr. BRAGG. I had hoped that in the consideration of bills submitted from my committee no gentleman would take an opportunity of making a political speech.

Mr. HISCOCK. I want to make one on the other side.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not propose to discuss the labor question, the tax question, the tariff question, nor the currency question; but I propose to speak of protecting the honor of the nation by keeping its plighted word and bonded faith, irrespective of my friends from the South or from the North.

When gentlemen talk about oppressive taxation they are not talking about what underlies this bill. This is a bill to execute a covenant made by the Government with these people if they would aid in its defense. It was a covenant made with the men who went for the defense of the Government to protect the property that is represented by the gentleman from New York. Their blood is property. [Applause.] It is not a question of tax.

The Government said, on the call for three hundred thousand men, that every man who served two years, or was discharged for disability, should receive a bounty of $100. So spoke the President of the United States in his proclamation. Three hundred thousand men came to the field. A minor officer, one of the auditing officers of the Government, concluded he had charge of the honor of the Government as well as the Treasury, and so he commenced to hold that if a man was discharged for disability in two years he would be entitled to his $100 bounty; but if he served two years, eleven months, and twenty-one days and for gallant conduct was promoted, he should be punished by taking away what had been given to the man who went out of the service a year before. Was that keeping faith on the part of the Government with these men? It was not, and thank God, if there be no other thing for which this administration ought to be thanked, it is that the Comptroller has decided that that was not the proper construction of the law, and has commenced for all cases not decided to make allowances for what the Government contracted to pay the men under the three hundred thousand call.

In 1864 when the Government was supposed to be in its last throes, when even the Republican party was willing to let up on its party organization and call for Union men independent of men who belonged to that organization and even made Union tickets in many States, the Government then made another proclamation, that all persons who were serving under their first term of enlistment and who re-enlisted in order to keep up the ranks of the Army, should be allowed for such enlistment $402, if I recollect the precise amount.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Was that by a statute?

Mr. BRAGG. It was an order made by authority of Congress, issued from the War Department. The payment of that money by the orders of the War Department was apportioned so that it practically paid in installments the private soldier and non-commissioned officer who veteranized; his first installment, if I recollect rightly, would be $25. If he served six months and was promoted in the last of the great battles of the war, when he went to settle his account as an officer this honest, generous Government charged him up with the money they had paid him and made him pay it back notwithstanding their bond.

This bill is to provide that those officers so promoted that were entitled to their $100 when they were promoted did not forfeit it by reason of their good conduct, and that they shall not be punished by imposing that as a fine upon them. And it goes further. It provides that those officers who were promoted and compelled to pay back the bounty which they had earned and which belonged to them shall have their account settled by a credit of the amount that the Government improperly took from them.

That is all the politics there is in this bill.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIEL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Comptroller now rules that is the true intent and meaning of the law?

Mr. BRAGG. I think so; I have seen such a decision published.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But that is not retroactive. It only applies to future cases.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. When was this decision made?

Mr. BRAGG. Some time during the present year; I can not tell you when. I saw it published in the newspapers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will trouble the gentleman with an additional question. Has any other measure ever been brought before Congress to redress this omission and wrong?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. When?

Mr. BRAGG. In the Forty-fifth Congress. I introduced the bill myself.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It is not then brought up now for the first time?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will make only one or two brief observations in connection with this bill. There is no more friendly tribunal in the world to which a man ever made an appeal for the recognition of every just claim and for the redress of any real wrong than this Congress in its dealings with the Union soldiers. But, sir, whenever a bill comes before this House that carries with it an appropriation of money, I hold the time has come for very careful scrutiny; all discussion bearing upon matters of taxation and the distress that exists among the people is exceedingly pertinent and proper. If there has been an omission in dealing with the soldiers, if a wrong has been committed that ought to be righted, I do not believe there is a gentleman upon this floor from any section of the country who does not heartily wish to see the record made clean and correct. But, sir, we should remember one thing in our general policy, that we have now beneficiary legislation for the survivors of the late war that amounts to an annual expenditure that is not below what is spent for the standing armies of any except three or four of the leading nations of the earth.

We imagine that we are without the expenditures of a great military establishment, but, while still burdened with a debt that results from that war, our annual expenditures of this character are, I repeat, as great as those of any nation on earth for its military establishment except three or four of the principal monarchies of Europe. That is all right and just and proper. But, sir, when these rates and expenditures have been fixed at a time when the gratitude of the country was at its highest flood, when these rates and expenditures have been fixed at a time when the purchasing power of money was far less than it is to-day or ever will be again, it behooves the people of this country to analyze the causes—I will not say the motives—which impel to additional legislation of this sort. I will not say that they are demagogical, but I will say that they are very apt to be unwise and unpatriotic in view of the just claims of all classes of the people.

But, in the face of all this, bring up your claim, and if you will establish it by some other line of appeal than that which was made just now by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], an appeal merely to the loyalty of the claimant and to the ancient rebelliousness of those who sit in judgment upon the claim, you will have it allowed upon the establishment of such merit as would pass it before any dispassionate tribunal in the country. Before a single syllable had fallen from the lips of a Southern man the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] had to laud the loyalty of the claimant, without arguing the merits of the case, and had to cast odium upon those who, whatever they are or whatever they have been, are here as free and unshackled American citizens, representing the tax-payers of this country. Sir, it is in that spirit, in the spirit of loyalty, taking up these obligations of gratitude, remembering that we are a people of a common Union, and that to-day we are not from North or from South, from East or from West, but from the different portions of one common country and representing the tax-payers of that country—it is in that spirit that I say: establish your claim, establish its merits, and you shall have my vote for its allowance; but do not, for God's sake, come here with such appeals as the one we have just heard.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, there seems to have been a strange misconstruction here of my language. I take it, sir, that in the House from time to time in the discharge of my public duties I have shown a disposition to do what I believe to be right, and that if it has brought me into unfraternal relations with the gentlemen upon the other side of the House I have not therefore shrunk from the discharge of that duty. It is an entirely gratuitous construction of my language in which the gentlemen find a predicate for opposition to this most just measure, which in the proper discharge of my duty to these my comrades of the war I can not allow to proceed. Gentlemen on this side of the House [the Democratic side], I had occasion to learn your quality upon other fields than this, when I looked down the leveled barrels of your muskets and you looked down the leveled barrels of ours, and I am perfectly willing to intrust the case of these soldiers to the magnanimity of the men whom I saw upon all the fields of the war, except when I was laid aside for repairs, and that without any appeal to past passion.

There is no disposition upon my part, none I trust upon the part of any man here, to attempt the tricks of a demagogue, and in the name of patriotism to perpetrate a crime against a peaceful condition of things in this country. This nation is your nation, thank God, as well as ours, and it is so by the courage and the valor of the men for whom I plead. It was not our fault that you were not with them, so that you might to-day be the beneficiaries of this act the passage of which we seek at your hands and at the hands of your colleagues. It is not our fault. You made your election and we made ours. We fought it to an end. It is done, and let it remain done since 'tis well done. Now then, if you are honorable men—and you have attested it upon a hundred fields—the appeal lies as strongly to you as it does to us. There is no dividing line here. The honor of the Government against which you fought ought to be as dear to you now as it is to the men who then fought to maintain its honor. This is a cold question of a contract, and my remark to this side of the House was rather in the nature of a compliment, the recognition of the courage of men who could see courage in their opponents, although in the end they had to see it through the bitterness of defeat. That remark was no appeal to the spirit of party. It was an appeal to no difference upon the great question of loyalty. Here is a cold question of a contract made by the Government of the United States with its soldiers, which contract that Government repudiated; and the question is whether or not this Congress will now do that which the Government by its solemn proclamation and declaration promised to do for its soldiers then.

Mr. Chairman, I can not pass without comment the extraordinary defense which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] sees fit to make for the gentlemen of the South who are supposed by him to be suffering under some sensitive disability which closes their lips. When did the gentleman become the guardian of the South? Who is raising the ghost of the defunct confederacy if not the gentleman from New York? Who asks the votes of Southern men for this measure unless they be given as a matter of conscience? Certainly I do not. The gentleman says he does not blame members from the South for voting for river and harbor bills to get even with the North. Is the business of legislation reduced to a contemptible swap? Is that the high level of the gentleman's defense of the South? Mr. Chairman, against the deep damnation of this petty defense of men of the South I protest. This is not a game of larceny. We present this measure upon its merits, and let it stand or fall by the votes of members of this House, which they are free to give or withhold.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAIRD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You say this was a contract.

Mr. LAIRD. I say so.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In what way was the contract made? Otherwise than by law?

Mr. LAIRD. I suppose the construction made by the order of the Secretary of War was afterward ratified by law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If it was ratified by law, then there was law for the contract. Why, then, is it not enforced by the law that made it?

Mr. LAIRD. It is not enforced by the law that made it by reason of the misconstruction put upon the contract by the auditing officers of the Government.

Mr. BLAND. May I ask the gentleman how long ago that construction was given?

Mr. LAIRD, The order upon which the re-enlistments took place was dated the 25th of June, 1863. The order upon which the construction which refused payment of these claims was based was made in August, 1866.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask another question. How does it happen that this matter has been pending so long?

Mr. LAIRD. I will say to the gentleman that a bill to do this very thing did once pass this branch of Congress.

Mr. ROGERS. When?

Mr. BLAND. This construction having been made at a time when the laws and orders on the subject were all fresh in the minds of the auditing officers, and when, we may presume, the whole matter was well understood, it seems to me now quite late to appeal to Congress to set aside the construction then placed upon the order and the law by the auditing officers of the Government.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My friend from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] says that the reason this bill is necessary is that the law has been misconstrued by the officers whose duty it was to construe it. Now I ask whether those interested in this matter have not a right to enforce their claims in the courts; and, if so, why do they not do it?

Mr. LAIRD. I can not answer for them; and we have not discharged our duty, as I understand, unless by law we furnish to these men a clear remedy.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is our duty to make laws; but the enactment of laws will not enforce those already in existence. When was the construction complained of first adopted and by whom?

A MEMBER. In 1866.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What court would the gentleman from Tennessee have the soldier go into in order to enforce the contract?

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] asks me what court I would have the soldier go into to enforce his claim. The laws provide the court that can compel the officers of the Government to do their duty under the law.

Mr. LAIRD. What action have the men against the Government? I do not wish to waste time in quibbling about this matter. There is no court that has jurisdiction to award these men the remedy to which they are entitled. Let the nation perform its agreement with them.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The officers of the law——

Mr. LAIRD. I can not yield further to the gentleman from Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who wishes to ask a question.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to ask one question, and I will say in advance that if I am satisfied the Government has made this contract I shall vote for the bill. But the question which I want answered, as a matter of information, so that this case may be understood, is this: If the claimant has this right which is contended for under an existing law, has he not his remedy by mandamus to compel the Government officers to pay him his bounty?

A MEMBER. How can a court control the judicial discretion of an officer by mandamus?

Mr. DANIEL. But, under the law, is it a judicial discretion?

Mr. MILLS. Where the duty of the officer is ministerial, he can be controlled by mandamus, but not upon a matter confided to his discretion.

Mr. DANIEL. The question I wish to put to the gentleman from Nebraska is this: If the claimant, having been a volunteer for two years, I believe it is, has the right under the law to demand this bounty, where is the difficulty in his asking a mandamus to compel the payment of the bounty?

Mr. LAIRD. My answer to the gentleman is this, and it will serve as an answer to all these interrogatories: If every soldier who has been wronged by the construction of the auditing officers of the Government in the matter of his pay is compelled to go into court to sue, that is an end to any remedy for him.

Mr. DANIEL. One case would settle the question.

Mr. LAIRD. The soldier might spend all his property in the effort to recover what he is entitled to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. One decision would settle the question, and would determine the rights of parties in all cases of the same class.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, as I shall have to vote on this question——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. REAGAN. I only desire a few moments.

Mr. LAIRD. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. As I shall be called upon to vote on this question, I desire to say that when we are asked to pass a bill like this we are entitled to information from the proper Department of the Government as to what will be the probable cost of the measure. The Committee on Military Affairs come to this House with a bill as to the cost of which they do not profess to have any idea; and they do not seem to have inquired at the War Department to obtain an estimate from that Department, which could certainly be made there. I am induced to make this remark, because some years ago there was before this House a bill which it was alleged on particular inquiry would not cost the Government more than $20,000,000 or $30,000,000, the highest estimate that any one made being $60,000,000. In that case it turned out that the Commissioner of Pensions in his first report after the passage of the bill estimated that the measure would cost the Government $750,000,000.

No one can say that the present bill will not cost the Government more than $30,000,000; but how much more we can not tell. I suppose from the suggestions made by gentlemen here that the answer to this would be that this is a debt which the Government owes upon a contract which it has made. But how does it come to pass that a debt arising upon a contract made more than twenty years ago has never been enforced against the Government?

Will it be assumed that Congress has been unpatriotic, the Republican party has been wanting in its duty and fidelity to the soldiers, that it has been unfaithful to its contracts and obligations for twenty years, and just now has discovered the Government is indebted to these people and under obligations to pay a sum of money in any case whatever the amount may be?

It is for such reasons as this I shall vote against this or any other bill which comes to this House and asks for indefinite appropriations. I am slow to accept the proposition this Congress has been for more than twenty years so unpatriotic as to have failed in its duty to the soldiers. I can hardly well think that is the case. I can hardly believe it has been left for twenty years to this Congress now to discover the obligations of the Government to pay these particular men.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] made some remarks a little bit ago which had better be heeded by this House. Instead of piling up new burdens upon the people we had better begin to lighten those burdens. We have gone on by a system of legislation for twenty years the effect of which has been to accumulate vast fortunes in the hands of a few individuals and corporations of the country and inevitably to impoverish the great mass of the people. The principle and cause which led to this are going on in their operations, and the fruits of this course are being demonstrated to the American people to-day by poverty, by suffering, by strikes. And gentlemen must not suppose they can relieve themselves by piling up additional burdens. Instead of preserving the Government, our policy for twenty years has been to pile up fortunes in the hands of the few and impoverish the great mass of the people and create privileged classes in violation of the spirit and genius of our Government and in defiance of the plain injunction of the Constitution itself.

How? We have fixed a class of judicial officers who, when they retire from service, are paid for life for doing nothing, and Army officers, Navy officers, and officers of the marine service. And we had bills before the last Congress for more than a dozen additional classes of men to be paid for life, because they have been more fortunate than their fellow-citizens and been able to get into valuable positions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman from Nebraska will allow me one minute more.

Mr. LAIRD. I will yield one minute more, but no more.

Mr. REAGAN. We had better attempt to modify or repeal the laws which are oppressing the people. We had better begin to learn to do justice to the people before we are forced to learn it in an unpleasant way to the whole country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. I hope the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. LAIRD. Gentlemen must make speeches in their own time if they rise to oppose the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to oppose it on legal grounds.

Mr. LAIRD. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to correct the exaggerated statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in reference to the amount of money involved in this legislation. He has stated to this House that the amount involved in this bill is $30,- 000,000. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], in reply to a question addressed to him by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], said that the entire amount involved would not exceed $200,000 or $300,000.

Mr. REAGAN. If the committee has that information it never yet has stated it.

Mr. LAIRD. No; they have not. I understood the committee, from the best information they could get, to fix it at that amount of $200,000 or $300,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. So the gentleman stated in his response to the questions of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. LAIRD. I take it the bill has been sufficiently discussed; and I hope by unanimous consent all further debate will be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. STEELE. I hope that will be done, and the debate can continue under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

Mr. BRAGG. I move the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope that will be voted down.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 116, noes 39.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer army, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and pending that motion I move that all general debate on the pending bill be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest a little additional time. I move to amend by making it thirty minutes.

The question first recurred on the amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The motion as amended was then adopted.

The question next recurred on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate on the pending bill has been limited to thirty minutes, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it desired to give fifteen minutes of the time to gentlemen who were opposed to the passage of the bill. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana, from his motion, to be opposed to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not say that I am opposed to the bill; but I desire ten minutes for the purpose of making some remarks upon it.

Mr. ROGERS. I will take the time, Mr. Chairman, as I want to oppose the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I think the Chair misapprehended the purpose of the gentleman from Indiana. His purpose is to consume the day.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; my purpose is to amend the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I listened with the best attention of which I am capable to the arguments both of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I understood both gentlemen to assert that this was a contract of the Government, and that this bill was based upon a specific contract on the part of the Government.

It may be that I have failed to understand these gentlemen. It may be that I occupy the same attitude upon the subject of this bill which my friend from New York declared for himself, namely, a state of ignorance; but I think I understand the provisions of the bill, whether I understand the facts upon which it is based or not; and if the bill is true then I say it is not a specific contract of the Government at all, but an effort on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs to equalize the three classes sought to be benefited by the bill and place them on the same footing with those who had performed the duty under the act in question—their comrades in arms.

But, sir, to discuss this bill in the manner in which I propose to discuss it, for I intend to discuss it altogether upon legal grounds, I invite attention to its provisions. The first section of the bill provides:

That all soldiers of the late war who re-enlisted as veteran volunteers, and afterward were discharged to receive promotions and receive commissions as officers in the Army, shall be paid all installments of veteran bounty which were withheld from them on account of their being so commissioned and mustered, the same as they would have been entitled to receive had they completed their term of enlistment without promotion and received an honorable discharge.

The very bill itself, so far as this class is concerned, states that they are to receive the same that they would have been entitled to receive if certain things had been done; from which the inference naturally follows that they did not conform to the terms of the contract, or the law if you please, under which they were mustered into service.

Appended to this section of the bill is a proviso in the following words:

Provided, That all soldiers of the late war who were discharged to receive promotion prior to their re-enlistment as veterans shall be entitled to receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they served as enlisted men for the full term of their enlistment and received an honorable discharge.

That is to say, they shall receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to receive had they done such and such things; which leaves the inference clear and unquestioned that they did not do these things which the law required them to do in order to receive the bounty which their fellow-members who conformed to the law received. The second proviso of this section is in the following words:

Provided further, That all volunteer soldiers or sailors of the late war who were honorably discharged on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty shall receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they been discharged on account of wounds.

Clearly conveying the inference that they did not conform to the law by serving the period of time which the contract demanded they should serve in order to be entitled to the bounty the bill now seeks to confer; and which law only gave the benefit of its provisions to those who were discharged on account of wounds, as my friend here from Kentucky suggests. But this bill now seeks to confer that bounty upon all without restriction.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill is to create new classes which would be entitled to the same privilege of bounty which the persons who originally entered the service and performed the conditions required by the law were entitled to receive. It is then an effort to do—what? To place upon an equal footing the men who did not conform to the law with those who did conform to the law; and now that brings me to the principle against which I enter my earnest protest.

Sir, whenever we recognize the principle that we shall go back to take up the four years of that unfortunate conflict and undertake to settle the equities of all persons engaged in it, equalize the compensation they received, and put all upon an equal footing, we open a door which we can never again close; we open a door that will absorb more than all of the pension-money that has ever been expended in this country up to this time. It is a question which involves bounty, additional pay for service, land-warrants, pensions, bounties, back pay, a dozen things which have been conferred upon various classes of persons either by special enactments, by general orders, or by law, to take effect from the time, or to be regulated by the time they were mustered into the service and the length of their service. It will take more to equalize bounties and place all soldiers upon an equal footing, having reference to the value of money at the time it was then paid and the other conditions which must necessarily enter into the calculation, than it will to pay the entire pension-roll of the country. I maintain, sir, that we can not afford that precedent; and right here I enter my protest against the policy of attempting to place persons who have not conformed to law upon an equal footing with those who have conformed to it and who are entitled to the conditions of the contract, the provisions of which they knew when they entered the service. Therefore, when you tell me, as these gentlemen have told me, that we are called upon here to execute a contract, I respond it is not so nominated in the bond.

It does not appear on the face of the bill, nor does it appear from anything that has been presented in this discussion, that they conformed to the law the benefit of which you seek to give them; and I shall vote against the bill on that ground.

I will close the remarks I have to make with this statement, that if it can be shown by anybody that these men have complied with the law and been denied the privileges and benefits which their comrades received under it, then I will support this bill, because I believe in the enforcement and execution of every contract, whether between private citizens or between the Government and any of its citizens.

I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] has eight minutes of his time remaining, which he yields to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Here the committee informally rose, and Mr. DUNN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 444) to amend section 3336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

An act (H. R. 5198) to remove the disabilities of John Taylor Wood, of Louisiana;

An act (H. R. 5876) for the relief of Dinwiddie B. Phillips;

An act (H. R. 274) for the relief of John A. Morris;
An act (H. R. 7647) to establish a light-house at Seul Choix Point, Michigan;
An act (H. R. 5539) for the relief of James G. Martin;
An act (H. R. 7467) to grant for the use of the public a street across the United States grounds in the city of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee;
An act (H. R. 6980) making an appropriation to complete the public building at Jackson, Tenn., and to reappropriate an unexpended balance therefor;
An act (H. R. 327) to enable national banking associations to increase their capital stock and to change their names or locations;
An act (H. R. 4493) to amend the act of June 15, 1844, and for other purposes; and
An act (H. R. 5549) limiting the cost of a public building at Rochester, N. Y.

RELIEF OF OFFICERS OF VOLUNTEER ARMY.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HOLMAN. The subject of equalizing bounties has excited much interest for many years. The various laws in regard to bounties enacted during the war created great inequalities and much injustice. In the proclamation issued by the President in which seventy-five thousand men were called into the field at the opening of the war in 1861 a bounty of $100 was promised to each soldier who enlisted for the period named. Soon after Congress met, on the 4th July, 1861, the proclamation issued by the President was ratified by Congress at the session which commenced July 4, 1861, and the Supreme Court afterwards held that the soldier who enlisted under that proclamation was entitled to receive a bounty without reference to the period of his service if he was honorably discharged.

The act of July, 1861, has a special application to the pending bill, promising a bounty of $100 to those who enlisted and served for two full years. Afterward, I think in October, 1863, in an emergency, by direction of the President of the United States, an order was issued by the Secretary of War making a promise of $300 to the soldiers who enlisted and served for the period of three years; and that, if I remember correctly, was afterward ratified by an act of Congress and increased bounties were given for re-enlistment. So that these various laws have created great inequalities in the bounties; one law giving in effect some of our soldiers $100 bounty without any reference to the period of service; another giving $100 for a two years' period of service; and a third paying the soldier who enlisted for three years a bounty at the rate of $100 per annum, and for re-enlistment still more.

At a very early moment after the close of the war the inequality of the bounties was the subject of a great deal of interest, and it was insisted that these bounties ought to be equalized. As early, I think, as the year 1867 I introduced a bill in the House to equalize the bounties and to pay each soldier who was honorably discharged from the service the sum of eight and one-third dollars a month for the period of service, deducting from that sum the amount of bounty he had received. In this way each soldier would have received the same bounty that the most favored received for the actual period of service, he having been honorably discharged.

Now, let us look at the second proviso in this bill and see how it would operate in connection with this proposition to equalize the bounties and to place on the same footing all the men who served in the Union Army. The proviso in the first section is as follows:

Provided further, That all volunteer soldiers or sailors of the late war who were honorably discharged on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty shall receive the same bounty as they would have been entitled to had they been discharged on account of wounds.

Of course it often would occur that a soldier left the Army on account of sickness and yet re-enlisted. He would receive under this bill the same bounty exactly for a short period of service as for a long period, while under the general law he might serve for a long period of time under the act of July, 1861, without receiving any bounty whatever. So that this bill, while doing justice in some degree, I think instead of tending toward the equalization of bounties leaves the inequality of bounties still strikingly apparent.

I have noticed there are pending in the House a large number of bills to equalize these bounties; and if I can get the ear of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] who presides over the Committee on Military Affairs I would like to inquire whether or no the bills to equalize the bounties, to do equal and exact justice to all the men who served in the Union Army and were honorably discharged—whether bills of that class have received any consideration on the part of his committee?

Mr. BRAGG. The bills for the equalization of bounties?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; not officially by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are such bills before the committee?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not that measure regarded as one fairer in its operation and more just to all the soldiers of the Union Army than this partial measure now pending?

Mr. BRAGG. If the gentleman desires my personal individual opinion I shall give it very frankly. I am utterly, thoroughly, and wholly opposed to the whole doctrine of equalization of bounties. I believe in giving each man precisely what he was entitled to and no more.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] think that the soldier who enlisted and served a month and was honorably discharged, as in the case of those who enlisted under the President's original proclamation, should have the whole bounty of $100, and yet that the soldier who served a year, eleven months and twenty-nine days should receive no bounty, as under the act of July, 1861? Is it not fairer to pay each soldier a bounty according to the actual period of his service?

Mr. BRAGG. I will answer that. If the Government had stipulated that it would pay pro rata for length of service, then I would say perform the bond; but when the Government stipulated to pay $100 bounty to every soldier suffering from disability contracted in the service, it does not make any difference whether the disability was contracted after three weeks, nine months, or three years' service. It is the fact of disability which entitles the party to the bounty, not the fact of service.

Mr. HOLMAN. For twenty years it has been held otherwise by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. BRAGG. It is not held otherwise by the present Second Comptroller.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know; but for twenty years it has been held otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has expired.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the discussion of this bill has taken the range that it has. It is really a simple proposition, and one not difficult to understand. There are concerned in this bill two classes of soldiers and two classes of discharges. There are the non-veterans and the veterans—those discharged for promotion and those discharged for disability. In 1861 the Government proclaimed through the Chief Magistrate, and Congress enacted, that every person enlisting under a certain call for soldiers should be entitled to receive $100 bounty. Subsequently, it was ruled that if within two years a soldier was discharged on account of wounds he should receive the entire bounty.

Mr. HOLMAN., That was the law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes; that was the law. But if discharged on account of disease, on a surgeon's certificate of disability, then it was held that he should not receive the balance of his bounty. That was not law, but construction. Again, it was held that if a man was discharged for promotion, that was a discharge for favor, causa gratia—a favor to the soldier, and that, therefore, it put him outside the class entitled to the bounty. Now, my first proposition is this: The Government made a proposition to its citizens to assist it in its time of need. Certain citizens accepted the proposition. The proposition was not to serve for a definite length of time, but it was to enlist to serve for a definite length of time. If a soldier failed to serve for a definite length of time, that was not his fault, whether he were wounded, discharged, or disabled by disease, or promoted on account of his superior service or gallantry.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly; although my time is very short.

Mr. ROGERS. If it was the act of enlistment that entitled the man to the bounty would he not have been entitled to it even if he had deserted?

Mr. CUTCHEON. No; because by that act he forfeits all his rights under the contract. He himself breaks the contract, and therefore can not claim under it. But, Mr. Chairman, these men did not resign to accept promotion. They were promoted, and discharged by the Government in order that they might accept the promotion. When the Government held out its proposition and the citizen accepted that proposition, the contract was complete and binding from that time forth for evermore unless the soldier broke it.

Now what is the second case in the bill, the case of the veterans? In the fall of 1863, after the invasion of Pennsylvania, after the fall of Vicksburg, after the defeat at Chickamauga, the Government, finding itself in straits, with the terms of its three-year men expiring during the coming winter, held out a new proposition, and said that if the old regiments would come to the front and re-enlist, veteranize, the Government would extend to each of those men a bounty of $402. There was nothing said about being discharged on account of disease or about being discharged to accept promotion. There was simply the broad proposition that if those men who had already borne the brunt for three years would now come forward and re-enlist they should each receive $402 of bounty. They came up like gallant and patriotic soldiers; they had stood the brunt for three years and they were willing to stand it for three years more, if necessary. They accepted the proposition of the Government, and then that proposition became a contract binding to all intents and purposes upon the Government and upon both parties, unless the soldier broke it by desertion.

Again, when these veterans, for gallant service or for superior ability, were mustered out, as a favor, in order that they might accept promotion, the construction of the Government officers was that they thereby forfeited the unpaid balance of their bounty. Not only that, but by force the Government officers deducted from the pay of those men every dollar of the bounty that they had already received. That is what I protest against. I protest against repudiation by this Government in any form, and I think this was repudiation pure and simple. Perhaps it might have been excusable at the time under our great financial stress, when our money was exhausted and we were putting out issue after issue of paper currency and exhausting our credit in the markets of the world—possibly, I say, there might have been some excuse at that time for the Government putting this construction upon the contract. But that excuse has been long since exhausted. We are now able, abundantly able, to live up to the contract we have made; and without any reference whatever to sectional feeling or to any other extrinsic consideration, let us all stand by the honor of the Government and redeem the pledge which it made in the hour of its necessity.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy any time in general debate. I ask that we now proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. As the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] does not desire to use the rest of the time allotted to him, the bill, if there be no objection, will now be considered by sections.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the gentleman does not use the time, that does not prevent other members from using it?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] desire to address the House?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish to inquire the meaning of the first proviso to the bill, which is in these words:

That all soldiers of the late war who were discharged to receive promotion prior to their re-enlistment as veterans—

Meaning apparently those who did not re-enlist—

shall be entitled to receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they served as enlisted men for the full term of their enlistment and received an honorable discharge.

Mr. BRAGG. I will explain that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I shall be very glad to hear an explanation.

Mr. BRAGG. That applies to a class of soldiers who had served a sufficient length of time to entitle them to their $100 bounty, and who between that time and the expiration of their term of service, and before veteranization, were promoted.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. BRAGG. Yes; that is just what it means. Perhaps I can best illustrate the matter by giving a case. A soldier we will suppose enlisted under the act of 1861; by the terms of that act, if he served two years, he was entitled to $100.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Two years, or three?

Mr. BRAGG. Two. I will read the section of the act of 1861, if the gentleman so desires.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not care about it.

Mr. BRAGG. Now, if this soldier served two years and was not discharged, but continued in service a portion of the third year, and during that time accepted a commission upon the recommendation of his commanding officer, was appointed a second lieutenant or a first lieutenant or a captain, the Department held, as a construction of that law, that this soldier was not discharged except as a matter of favor; and by accepting the favor which the Department gave him by allowing him to be discharged, it was held he waived his claim to the bounty which he had already earned.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And that would be the case also if he had served but one day. He would receive the full bounty for the two years.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, and others. Certainly he would under this bill.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. REED, of Maine. As one extreme case was put, I put another, simply to show the scope of the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. This bill seems to be misunderstood. If it means what the gentleman from Wisconsin says, and it may, although I do not so understand it, I have no objection to it; because if a man enlisted with the promise that he should have a sum of money as bounty and afterward he served the length of time for which he was enlisted, but his services were found so valuable to the Government that he was promoted, I do not think this circumstance ought to deprive him of the promised bounty. But this proviso at the end of the first section means something more. If I understand it, it means this: Men enlisted under an order of the Department promising a certain sum of money as bounty, and afterward that promise was put in a law which provided that if the soldier so enlisted served two years, or was discharged, or quit the service before serving two years, because of wounds, then he should have the bounty.

Mr. BRAGG. Because of disability.

Mr. MORRISON. No, sir; "wounds" is the word; and this bill puts in "disability" so as to put the man who went out of service before the expiration of two years on account of diarrhea or other disease common to the camp on the same footing as the man who went out because he was wounded. That I believe to be the purpose of this last proviso to the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. MORRISON. It includes a new class of persons who under the law have not been entitled to the bounty—the law as it has been for twenty years excluded this class.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman is speaking of the second proviso. It was the first proviso I was inquiring about.

Mr. MORRISON. I have been discussing one proviso and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] the other. What I desire is that the bill shall be understood that we may pass so much of it as may have merit.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this bill, it provides for three distinct classes of soldiers: first, for men who, having served a given term of enlistment in the Army, re-enlisted as veteran volunteers and were subsequently discharged in order that they might receive their commissions as officers of the rank to which they had been promoted; second, those who prior to their re-enlistment as veterans received an honorable discharge for promotion; and, third, those who were honorably discharged by reason of disease or disability other than wounds incurred in the line of duty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a great difference in these three classes of men. Those belonging to the first class had served their country faithfully for a defined period, had received an honorable discharge, and had re-enlisted with the understanding that they should be allowed a certain bounty named in the call. Subsequent to their re-enlistment they were promoted from the ranks. Being private soldiers they were again discharged to the end that they might receive their commission from the Government. The second provision is a wholly distinct proposition, and very far-reaching in its effect, inasmuch as it provides that every soldier who was discharged for promotion previous to his re-enlistment as a veteran shall be entitled to the bounty that he might have received had he remained in the ranks until his original term of enlistment had expired and then re-enlisted as a veteran under the special call. The third clause provides that those who, from disease or causes other than wounds, were disabled from serving the full term of their enlistment should receive the same benefits as those who had been discharged on account of wounds.

The first class in my judgment are unquestionably entitled to recognition by Congress in the manner set forth in the bill. These men were serving their country as humble soldiers in the ranks, and by reason of special fitness or merit were promoted to the grade of commissioned officers and placed upon a higher plane. Surely the distinction thus won should not operate to deprive them of the pecuniary consideration promised them by the Government when after having served one term they agreed once more to enter the service in the ranks.

Those embraced in the second class, while doubtless equally worthy, are far more numerous; and in the absence of any estimate as to the amount to be necessarily expended should this provision be adopted it seems to me that it is asking too much to invite the House to sanction the measure. The list of those who would be benefited thereby is not confined to those who responded to the Government's call in a period of supreme trial, and after they had already fulfilled at least a liberal proportion of the duty devolving upon them as citizens. But the proposition extends far back and covers all who were discharged during the entire period of the war.

As to the third class there certainly can be no question in the minds of reasoning men that the provision is altogether too comprehensive to be considered blindly and without official data to enable the House to form some idea of the sum required to carry out the provisions of the act. All will agree as to the claims the soldier has upon the gratitude of the people, and if the past is an index to the future none of real merit will fail to be remembered in some form or other. But these do not properly come under consideration in connection with the original scheme of this bill. The first section of the bill is unquestionably fair and just, and the class embraced in that provision ought to be paid the sum promised by the Government at a time when their services were in supreme demand and were given in accordance with that promise, and they ought not to be exempted because they were taken from the ranks to a higher sphere of duty.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House general debate is now closed.

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOWDEN. Are amendments now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will now be considered by sections, and will be open to amendment under the five-minute rule. The Clerk will read the first section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all soldiers of the late war who re-enlisted as veteran volunteers, and afterward were discharged to receive promotion and receive commissions as officers in the Army, shall be paid all installments of veteran bounty which were withheld from them on account of their being so commissioned and mustered, the same as they would have been entitled to receive had they completed their term of enlistment without promotion and received an honorable discharge: Provided, That all soldiers of the late war who were discharged to receive promotion prior to their re-enlistment as veterans shall be entitled to receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they served as enlisted men for the full term of their enlistment and received an honorable discharge: Provided further, That all volunteer soldiers or sailors of the late war who were honorably discharged on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty shall receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they been discharged on account of wounds.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand the bill is now open to amendment under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. BRAGG. And the committee has the first right to offer amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. BRAGG. I move then to strike out all after the word "discharge," in line 10, down to the end of the first section. That will be to strike out the two provisos which have occasioned this trouble.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me suggest why that should not prevail.

Mr. BRAGG. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the words proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That all soldiers of the late war who were discharged to receive promotion prior to their re-enlistment as veterans shall be entitled to receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they served as enlisted men for the full term of their enlistment and received an honorable discharge: Provided further, That all volunteer soldiers or sailors of the late war who were honorably discharged on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty shall receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they been discharged on account of wounds.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire every member to know I make this motion to strike out. I discussed this bill on the principles involved in the first section and the second section without regard to these provisos. It was not my understanding or intention to support this bill and put in a new class not provided for by law. My proposition, which I stated in my argument, made in good faith, was to make a law which would carry out, in spite of the construction of the accounting officers of the Treasury, the law as it was written upon the statute-book. I do not intend to speak further than that, and to show my faith in the matter I make the motion to strike out those provisos.

Mr. PERKINS. If we are to enact legislation which is designed to do justice to those who wore the blue and defended their country in the hour of its extremity and peril, it seems to me that we ought not to discriminate, as we will do if the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is accepted.

I know that there are men upon this floor (for since this debate began I have conversed with a number of them, and I simply suggest that as an illustration because they represent many in the same condition scattered through all the loyal North) who served for almost two years as enlisted men wearing the uniform and carrying the musket of the private soldier, but who, because of their valor, because of their gallantry, because of their intelligence, won the shoulder-straps and secured the rank of commissioned officers before they had served two full years in the Army, and who because of this received no bounty whatever for their service, although many of them served four years and some even longer.

If the motion, therefore, of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] prevails, to strike out these provisos, these men who by this bill should get the benefit of the bounty would be excluded, and yet those who veteranized and received, in consequence of such veteran service, increased pay, although many of them did not serve so long as the class of which I speak, are to be provided for by the bill, notwithstanding the veteran bounty and compensation gave them better pay and more liberal recognition on the part of the Government than the class of men provided for by the other features of the bill and of whom I speak.

I claim, Mr. Chairman, that if we are to do justice, as we should do, we must not discriminate in favor of the veterans simply, but try to do justice to all. I know many men personally, and there are hundreds of them scattered all over the country—they will be found in every hamlet in the land—who served a period of three years or more, many of them four years, and a number of whom are on the floor of this House who served even for a longer period than that, who enlisted as privates in the beginning and wore the uniform of a private soldier, endured the hardships of a private soldier for twelve months, fifteen months, eighteen months, yes, for twenty-three months some of them, and who because of their worth and the exigencies of war happened to secure commissions and became commissioned officers, commissions won by their gallantry, their devotion, and their valor before they had quite completed the two years' service. These men could get no bounty and are to be discriminated against by this bill if the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin prevails.

For that reason I urge that the motion should not prevail. The second proviso of this bill in my judgment is one of the most meritorious features of it. It is to make provision for the private soldiers who were discharged because of disability before completing their two years' service.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SKINNER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] in discussing the provisions of this bill a few moments ago, in attempting to account for the votes of some of the Southern members upon this floor, made use of words to the effect that there were men representing Southern districts in this House who were compelled or forced to vote against their better judgment, and who voted, as he believed, for such propositions as the river and harbor bill for the sole purpose of getting even with the North.

I was in hopes that some man representing the South except myself should contradict that statement. I arise simply now to contradict it, and say that if there is no other man who represents a Southern district here than myself there is one at least who went into the war and fought upon the Southern side, all the way from Bethel to Appomattox, and has not cast a single vote in this House except as his better judgment dictated. I want to say also, Mr. Chairman, that I have voted on one or two occasions for propositions that were for the benefit of Northern soldiers, and I have voted on one or two occasions against propositions for their benefit; but each time I voted according to the dictates of my own judgment, and not because I came from one section or the other.

I have voted for two river and harbor bills, and expect to vote for another, not because I wanted to get even with the North, but because I believed that most of the provisions in these bills were right and ought to be passed. I want to say that there is no man on this floor who will go further to do justice to the Union soldier than myself, and wherever I believe there is justice in the proposition for their benefit I shall vote for it. Wherever I believe that a contract with the Government is out, and that it ought to be fulfilled, I shall vote to carry out that contract; and, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this, that there is no man here who is more of a free-trader than I; there is no man who is more in favor of reducing taxation than myself; but, notwithstanding that, I shall never vote to reduce taxes if their enforcement is necessary to carry out the contracts of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Wisconsin surrenders much of the good that is in this bill when he asks us to strike out these two provisos. He concedes in the argument that the veteran soldier of the country should have the bounty paid to him according to the order of the War Department. If that be true, can he suggest any reason why a private soldier who enlisted and served prior to 1863, should not have the benefit of the law as it was written previous to that time and as it existed at the time he enlisted? That is just and equitable to the soldier who became a veteran, and it is just and fair to the soldier who enlisted before the President called for his three hundred thousand more. Show me the difference, Mr. Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Now, as to the second proviso, why is there any doubt about it to-day? Why is it that the soldier who was honorably discharged did not, in fact, receive the bounty provided for under the act of 1863? It grew out of a misconception of the act of Congress of 1865. Congress, by section 4 of the act of March 3, 1865, provided as follows:

That every non-commissioned officer, private, or other person who shall hereafter be discharged from the Army of the United States by reason of wounds received in battle or skirmish, on picket, in action, or in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive the same bounty as if he had served out his full term. And all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the War Department, under date of June 26, 1863, had promulgated this order:

Every volunteer enlisted and mustered in the service as a veteran under this order shall be entitled to receive from the United States one month's pay in advance, and a bounty and premium of $402.

Before the soldier had claimed the benefit of that order this act of Congress was passed. When the accounting officers of the Department came to consider the original order of the Secretary of War and construed it in connection with this act of Congress, they held that only those soldiers discharged by reason of wounds received in battle were entitled to the provision in the original order.

I am not going to discuss whether that was right or wrong. Congress in this fourth section limited the provision to discharges because of wounds received in battle. There was no such provision in the order of the Secretary of War which I read, and under which these thousands of men came up in the hour of their country's need and marched to the defense of their flag. If Congress afterward used this language which led the accounting officers to make this mistake, we men to-day representing the people of this country, and I care not where those people be, North, South, East, or West, the people of this country should dare to do the right thing and not count the cost. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. It turns out the point I made against the bill is now conceded by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, namely that it was an effort on the part of the present Congress to place the men who had not conformed to the law under which they were mustered on an equal footing with those who were mustered in and had conformed to the law. That being conceded to be the fact I am willing to follow the gentleman from Wisconsin, if his motion to strike out prevails, with an additional proviso, to which I now invite his attention, which I shall propose to add after the word "discharge," in line 10, as follows:

Provided they served in all two years.

That would place officers, who were promoted for gallantry or for distinguised or meritorious services who had been mustered in as privates, on an equal footing with those who had served for two years as privates, and not take from them anything by reason of the fact that they had been promoted during the two years' service; so that with the amendment of the gentleman to strike out the two provisos in the first section and the adoption of this amendment these soldiers who, for meritorious services, were promoted from privates to officers would get all they would have got under the law if they had served for two years as privates; and that was all the law required. That was the contract, the bond. And it is too late now, at the end of twenty years, for anybody to ask us to reform the contracts or make new ones. We will have enough to do if we stand by the contract and carry it out in its letter and in its spirit; and it will be carried out in its spirit if we adopt the proviso I have read.

Mr. PETERS. Is it not a fact that before a man could veteranize he must have been in the service two years?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to say to the gentleman from Arkansas that his proviso is mere surplusage. By striking out the two provisos they are left under the law which requires they must have served two years.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman is correct in that view I will not press my amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], who has charge of this bill, to see if I can have an understanding what it really means with reference to one particular point. My attention had not been called to this bill until it was before the House for consideration.

Now take the second proviso:

Provided further, That all volunteer soldiers or sailors of the late war who were honorably discharged on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty shall receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they been discharged on account of wounds.

My understanding of the law has been that soldiers discharged on account of wounds were entitled to bounty though they did not serve for six months or any other time.

Mr. LAIRD. That is not the law. The rule under the construction of the statute was if a man was discharged inside of a service of two years, he could get the hundred dollars if he was discharged for wounds; but if for disability he could not.

Mr. CANNON. Am I correct in understanding that this proviso, if it is enacted, will put these soldiers, discharged on account of disease, precisely on all fours with those who were discharged on account of wounds?

Mr. LAIRD. Exactly; and that is what the proviso is for.

Mr. CANNON. Then I have to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] that when he proposes to strike out this proviso to my mind they propose to strike out the principal meritorious provision in the bill, and I will not so vote.

Mr. LAIRD. So far as this member of the Military Committee is concerned, I want it distinctly understood by the gentleman from Illinois and by the House that he is opposed to the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. CANNON. One word in conclusion. I am the last man to undertake to criticise the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] unkindly. I do not know that I have enough knowledge touching military affairs to criticise him at all; but, as I understand him, true to his policy all along, if I have understood his action from time to time in this House, he proposes by this amendment to so change the law as to benefit the officer, but where the private has even more merit for relief the gentleman is swift to come in and propose to amend his own bill. He proposes to eliminate that part of it which is for the benefit of the private, who in justice and God's chancery is entitled to this relief, while at the same time he is willing to let the officer have the relief.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, the discharge of that last piece of artillery from Illinois was heard here. [Laughter.] I think as much of my army comrades as my friend thinks of his comrades during the war, who I believe were not in the Army. [Renewed laughter.] The object of striking out the proviso is to make this bill conform to the law as it now stands, to make the decision of the Department as it should have been, and to add no new cases by increasing the bounty at this time. Every private soldier who served his two years and was discharged on account of wounds or disability received his bounty under the law. The law fixed the title to the bounty at two years' service unless where the man was discharged by reason of wounds contracted in the service; in that case the Department made a ruling and a discrimination in favor of the wounded soldier. Now, I propose by striking out this proviso to leave all the classes as the original law placed them, and to add no new classes. It is said that I have moved to strike out a portion of my own bill. In one sense that may be so, although I did not report this bill to the House. I am not supposed to be personally responsible for every bill that comes to this House from the Committee on Military Affairs, though I take it my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will admit that I am willing to shoulder all the responsibility that I ought to have, and sometimes a little more than I ought to have, from a slight idiosyncrasy of mine which occasionally prompts a desire to get into a muss after my blood has been cooling a long time and I am suffering from ennui. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion in good faith in regard to his bill?

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, under the existing law or under the first section of this bill, these officers can not receive this compensation without legislation. That is, you propose to change the law?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Then why is this legislation necessary?

Mr. BRAGG. We propose to change the rule of construction of the Department and to make the construction uniform. The present Department officers regard themselves as bound by the former rulings in regard to these old cases. The new cases that come up before the Comptroller will pass under the law as the law reads, but these old cases are tied up under the previous rulings of the Department, and the object here is to re-enact the law.

Mr. CANNON. That is, to legislate.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir. The purpose is to tell the Auditor of the Treasury what the law was that was passed on the 22d of July, 1861. That is all.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate upon this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee resumes its session (if it shall now rise) amendments will be in order.

Mr. BLAND. I hope we shall not close discussion until the opponents of this measure have had an opportunity to say something. I have been trying for some time past to get the floor to offer some observations against this bill.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 83, noes 36.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer army, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committeee of the Whole for the further consideration of House bill No. 7895; and pending that motion I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the pending paragraph and amendments be limited to one minute.

Mr. BLAND. The opponents of the paragraph have thus far had no opportunity to debate it. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin by striking out "one minute" and inserting "thirty minutes."

The amendment of Mr. BLAND was agreed to; there being—ayes 73, noes 54.

The motion, as amended, to close debate was agreed to.

The question recurring upon the motion of Mr. BRAGG that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pending bill, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending paragraph of this bill and all amendments thereto has, by order of the House, been limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr Chairman, inasmuch as the friends of this proposition disagreed as to what the law has been and what the law ought now to be declared to be, it seems to me this committee would do well to go back twenty years to the time when the statutes under consideration were enacted, when these military orders were promulgated, when the rulings of the War Department were made upon matters then fresh in the minds of the officers making the decision. The contemporaneous decision given to the law by the officers whose duty it was then to decide as to the effect of the law and the military orders under it is entitled to very great consideration. The officers who at that time had jurisdiction to interpret the law and carry it into effect, when everything pertaining to a just interpretation of the law and the military orders was before them, made a deliberate decision upon this question; and we should not at this late day undertake to reverse that decision upon a mere question as to whether or not we are able, as claimed by some gentlemen, to pass this measure as a matter of gratuity or bounty to the individuals interested.

As a matter of bounty, I suppose it may be contended that we are fully competent to meet the demand; and if it is to be considered as a gratuity or probably as a matter of just reward based upon the idea of paying men for valuable services, though the payment be not founded upon any legal obligation, we with our hundred millions of surplus in the Treasury to-day are doubtless fully able to meet all these demands.

My friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT], whom I do not see in the House, warned this committee and the country against excessive taxation—a very just and appropriate warning indeed; but he did not go far enough; he did not state the whole case. The difficulty is not only that the taxes as heretofore collected have been onerous, but that they are continuing to-day, and by this system of taxation over a hundred million dollars is hoarded away in the Treasury vaults, the officers of the Government refusing to pay it out in settlement of the public debt. I wish my friend from New York were here, because as I understand from his report as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means he still insists on holding in the Treasury this $100,000,000—an invitation for the very legislation which he here so much deplores.

Mr. Chairman, if we do not desire legislation of this sort, if, as claimed by the gentleman from New York, we are not in a condition to-day to further tax the people of this country, it would be good policy for him and other members occupying similar ground not only to advocate the reduction of taxes, but to urge the payment of the surplus upon the public debt, thus relieving the burden of the interest-bearing obligations of the Government. When that shall have been done and taxes reduced, we shall probably hear no more of these extravagant demands upon the tax-payers of this country.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill, because I believe the accounting officers whose duty it was to adjudicate and determine these accounts at the time when the question was originally presented understood the rules and orders bearing upon the subject, and that their contemporaneous construction has done justice and equity to all classes concerned.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, the contract made with the soldier for bounty when he went into the Army was made under the authority of an act of Congress, and proclaimed by the President of the United States through the Secretary of War, that proclamation saying to the citizen, "If you enlist to serve three years or during the war you shall have a bounty of $100." Another contract was made at a later day when the Government proclaimed, "If you re-enlist you shall have a bounty of $400." There was an act of Congress passed, I admit, which said that those who were wounded should receive the bounty, though they might have been wounded only a few days after they accepted this offer of the Government—those who were wounded, not those who were taken sick.

The proviso in the bill cuts off brave men in our Army who enlisted under the promise of the Government they should receive this bounty. It cuts them off; it cuts off every man who was taken sick.

It is not worth while to say to me, Mr. Chairman, that the Government of the United States has a moral right to do so. I appeal to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] that it is not worth while to say you have a moral right to make a contract. The contract was made when the soldier enlisted, and everything which the Government may have afterward declared did not in any way vitiate the right of the soldier to this bounty under that promise. The Government could make no law in justice to limit that bounty. The Government could not say to a man if you get sick in the Army you shall not get the bounty which we promised you when you enlisted.

The Government promised to give that bounty, and it is bound to execute that promise. I do not care what side gentlemen took in that war, they are all brave men, and behaved most honorably, they have the dignity and the honor to insist the Government shall keep its promises to its soldiers.

The promise of the Government clearly was to these soldiers if you enlist and serve so long you shall receive a bounty. I do not care on what gentlemen may have served in the late war. I feel confident they hold this Government has no right to nullify that contract made by the Government with its soldiers and deny the payment of bounty because a soldier may have been sick.

There is another reason why I oppose the amendment of the committee. No man will say because the Government has the power it ought to violate a contract with a sick soldier.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the very extraordinary language used a while ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT]. He says, when referring to the members of this House who were members of the confederate army, or are representing Southern States, "Yet they have come up manfully to all their obligations, but their mouths are closed, and it is not honest or honorable to press these measures on people who are not able to either express dissent or to give negative votes in silence."

These measures the gentleman refers to are in the pending bill and all kindred subjects; propositions to pension widows; propositions to simplify the pension laws; propositions to carry out and fulfill contracts which were made twenty years ago by the Government with its soldiery.

The gentleman says it is not honest or honorable to press these measures upon these men. When, Mr. Chairman, did it become dishonorable for a great nation to carry out its pledges? When did it become dishonest for a great nation to be fair and just to those whom it induced to enter its service? Why is it dishonest and dishonorable? There are men on this floor who were in the rebellion at one time against the Government; but through the largess, through the bounty, through the humanity, if you choose, of the dominant party, they hold seats to-day here upon this floor. Yet the gentleman says it is dishonorable to press these questions on them because they can not give negative votes in silence.

Why not? What is there to prevent any gentleman on that side expressing himself on any one of these propositions if he wants to? Is it because there is a great party necessity on the part of those gentlemen to assume to occupy a position on these questions which they do not really occupy? Is that the reason why they should keep silent or why they can not give negative votes? I deny it. Those gentlemen are not in a situation their friend and advocate would assume they are. The debate on this question negatives that. These gentlemen, or a number of them, have expressed themselves through their votes and through their speeches.

I take it, therefore, the special reason why the gentleman from New York thought it was dishonorable, why it was dishonest to press these men, was not the real one. It is simply because he is opposed to this class of legislation, simply because it is in his line, because he believes it to be his duty, as one of the marked and recognized leaders of the Democratic party, on all occasions when he may have the opportunity to oppose this class of legislation when it can be safely and securely done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, it is no more than right that some person on the Committee on Military Affairs should express his dissent from the attitude of the chairman of that committee, and his opposition to the amendment offered by the chairman and now pending. Without any discussion of the merits of the question I wish to say that I supposed this matter was fairly considered in the committee and understood by all of its members; and so far as I know it came here backed by the unanimous vote of that committee. I certainly trust that the House will do one of two things in this matter—that they will without further delay, after the expiration of these thirty minutes for debate, vote these amendments up or vote them down, and then that all the friends of this measure will promptly lend their assistance to obtain a final vote on what then remains of the bill.

Some expressions dropped from the gentleman who was last upon the floor in opposition to the bill with reference to what he called the "contemporaneous construction" of the auditing officers of the Government of this law at the time it was enacted and in force.

Mr. Chairman, you had just as well attempt to give the dignity of legal decisions to the wild sayings of the soothsayers and astrologers of the Dark Ages as to give the construction of law to the opinions of a parcel of clerks—ministerial officers of the Departments of the Government—when they assail the cold letter of the law upon which these men stand for their guaranteed rights.

If there is equity in the case of the veterans, there is equity in the case of the other persons covered by the two provisions of the bill which the chairman of the committee proposes to strike out.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to know what these auditors and officers to whom the gentleman refers are made for.

Mr. LAIRD. In this case they seem to have been made to rob the most meritorious class of soldiers in the field, and that apparently with the sanction of the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

Mr. BLAND. But the gentleman is certainly aware of the fact that the gentleman from Wisconsin, the chairman of the committee, and the gentleman from Nebraska himself, a member of that committee, differ very materially as to what the construction of the law is. They are not agreed upon the law, and hence since there was doubt upon the question I was quite willing to take the contemporaneous construction of the accounting officers of the Government.

Mr. LAIRD. The accounting officers stole the money from the soldiers by such a decision, and if you desire to back them up in it you are welcome to your privilege.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, when I was taken off the floor by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] I had intended to offer an amendment striking out the first proviso in the first section of the bill; but the gentleman's amendment includes this, and I hope, therefore, that it will prevail so far as this proviso is concerned. It reads as follows:

Provided, That all soldiers of the late war who were discharged to receive promotion prior to their re-enlistment as veterans shall be entitled to receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they served as enlisted men for the full time of their enlistment and received an honorable discharge.

If this proviso is allowed to stand a manifest injustice would be done those private soldiers who had to serve their full term of three years in the ranks in order to obtain the $100 bounty provided for under the act of July 22, 1861. It would be an unjust discrimination in favor of these officers who were promoted from the ranks, and which promotion carried with it increased compensation. Why should these officers receive the bounty intended only for those brave soldiers who carried the musket?

These soldiers received but $13 per month. In every case where one of these soldiers was promoted to a captaincy he received the monthly allowance of $118.50 instead of $13 per month, and it would be manifestly unfair to his comrades who served in the ranks for the full term of their enlistment before they could receive the benefits of the act of July 22, 1861, were these officers to receive the bounty proposed in this proviso in addition to his largely increased pay. If he had been promoted to the lowest grade in line or to a second lieutenantcy he would have received pay at the rate of $103.50 per month. So that it would seem almost unwarrantable to pass this bill unamended by striking out the first proviso.

The second proviso should be retained. It is the most meritorious provision in it, and reads as follows:

That all volunteer soldiers or sailors of the late war who were honorably discharged on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty shall receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they been discharged on account of wounds.

This provides for a class of soldiers not covered by the act of March 3, 1863, and who should have been provided for in said act. Why should not the soldier who served his country for one year and ten months of his term, and who was honorably discharged on account of disability contracted in the service other than for wounds, be entitled to the benefits of the act of July 22, 1861? Are not the equities all with him?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Do I understand my colleague from Pennsylvania to say that he is in favor of striking out the provisos?

Mr. SOWDEN. I am in favor of striking out the first one.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Only the first, leaving the second to remain?

Mr. SOWDEN. Certainly. I think I have made myself sufficiently clear on this point.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. If you strike out the second proviso, you strike out every virtue in the bill except those which apply to officers themselves.

Mr. SOWDEN. There is no occasion for any misunderstanding between my colleague and myself, for we seem to agree upon the main subject in controversy. The principal object of the bill before the House is to relieve those men who re-enlisted as veterans, and who while serving as such were mustered out of the service to receive promotion. Why should not these men receive the benefits to which they had become entitled by reason of their re-enlistment as veterans under general orders of the War Department dated Washington, June 25, 1863?

The Government agreed to give those men that re-enlisted under this order $402 bounty, and why should they not receive the benefits of their contract if they re-enlisted under the inducement held out to them by the Government under this order? These men accepted the terms offered them by the Government when they re-enlisted as veterans. And why should not the Government keep its faith with them? Is it to be said because these men after their re-enlistment as veterans were promoted that they should be deprived of the benefits of the contract? Is the Government to be relieved from its solemn obligation to its soldiers upon such trivial grounds? Oh, no. It should keep its promises and fulfill its obligations to these veteran soldiers even though they were promoted subsequently to their re-entering the service as veterans. The discussion that has been had on this bill upon both sides of this House is to be deprecated. Issues have been discussed that had better been left untouched.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask a question for information. By whom was the construction made of the statute that has been referred to, and when was that construction given? I should be glad to receive an answer to that question from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, or the gentleman who has charge of the bill, or any other gentleman who is acquainted with the facts. I understood this act had been construed by a proper officer in a case properly made, and that years ago. Now, I am ignorant of the matter. I do not know by whom that construction was made or when. Can not some of the gentlemen who know the facts tell us?

Mr. GOFF. If the gentleman will allow me I will answer his question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. GOFF. I have before me the general order of the War Department, No. 191, for the year 1866, in which the original order of the War Department offering the bounty of $402 was construed in connection with the act of March 3, 1865.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Who was at that time the Secretary of War? Who signed that order?

Mr. GOFF. The order was issued in the year 1866.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Who signed it?

Mr. GOFF. I have not the order here in full; I have only the extracts as given by the Military Committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is the date of the order?

Mr. GOFF. July 28, 1866.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Who was the Secretary of War who gave that construction?

Mr. CUTCHEON. It was either Mr. Stanton or Ulysses S. Grant.

Mr. GOFF. The construction was based on the act of 1865, which used the language "any soldier who shall have been discharged on account of wounds received in the service." Now, the accounting officers of the Treasury construed that act to be a limitation by Congress of the original order of the War Department. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky, is it fair, is it equitable, for this great Government over two years after these soldiers have veteranized to come and by its legislative department restrict the operations of the order under which they enlisted?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will say that question should have been directed to the late Mr. Stanton or to General Grant.

Mr. STEELE. I do not understand that the Secretary of War made the construction to which the gentleman from Kentucky is referring.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As I understand the matter, in 1865 Congress passed an act concerning the soldiers who had served the country, and the Secretary of War at that time, either Stanton or Grant, construed that act, and now in 1886 we are called upon by legislative action to reverse that action of the Congress of 1865.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Kentucky is entirely in error. It is the construction not of the Secretary of War but that of the Auditor to which he is referring.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am merely proceeding on the information which I received from the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. All I desire is the accurate fact. The gentleman from Indiana says it was not the Secretary of War who gave the construction as I understood the gentleman from West Virginia to state. Will some gentleman settle which is right and which is wrong?

Mr. STEELE. I did not understand the gentleman from West Virginia to say that the Secretary of War construed the law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman to say so. If that is the fact, we have for twenty years been acting under a construction given by officers of the Government.

Mr. GOFF. I hope the gentleman will not misunderstand me. What has been carried out is a construction by the accounting officer of the order of the Secretary of War in connection with the act of 1865.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now, that construction has continued through the various administrations since 1866. Congress has been in session every winter all that time. There has, therefore, been during that time this crying injustice which the gentleman from West Virginia characterizes with so much earnestness and to which the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] applied the strong word of "robbing."

Now, the point I make is this: Is it not fair to presume that just after the war, in the heat of the gratitude for peace, that construction was far more apt to be the correct one, in accordance with the simple doctrine of contemporaneous construction of an act, than the construction now put by my friend from Nebraska and the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. STEELE. Sometimes constructions are made by necessity.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Nebraska, I believe we on our part want bygones to be bygones except in our admiration for the heroism of the soldier.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the first section after the word "discharge," in line 10, namely the following:

"That all soldiers of the late war who were discharged to receive promotion prior to their re-enlistment as veterans shall be entitled to receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they served as enlisted men for the full term of their enlistment and received an honorable discharge: Provided further, That all volunteer soldiers or sailors of the late war who were honorably discharged on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty shall receive the same bounty that they would have been entitled to had they been discharged on account of wounds."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 117.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Army," in line 5, insert the following:
"And the widows of such of said soldiers as may be deceased."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I offer as an amendment to the first section what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, line 3, strike out the word "soldier" and insert "enlisted men in the military or naval service of the United States or in its Marine Corps."
In line 5, after the word "Army," insert "naval or Marine Corps."

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the chairman of the Military Committee will accept that amendment, as it simply extends the benefit of this act to the naval and Marine Corps.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The question being taken, the chairman stated that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 50.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (in his seat). No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. No gentleman has risen in his place and made the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I rise and make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Arkansas to make the point of order. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 108, noes 26.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair will cause the roll to be called, in accordance with the rule of the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, my colleague, Mr. MURPHY, is at home sick.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Adams, J. J.	Davenport,	Kelley,	Ryan,
Aiken,	Davidson, R. H. M.	Ketcham,	Scranton,
Anderson, J. A.	Dorsey,	Kleiner,	Seymour,
Barnes,	Dougherty,	Le Fevre,	Singleton,
Barry,	Ellsberry,	Lovering,	Spriggs,
Belmont,	Ermentrout,	Matson,	Springer,
Brady,	Findlay,	McKinley,	Tarsney,
Browne, T. M.	Fisher,	Milliken,	Taulbee,
Brumm,	Foran,	Murphy,	Taylor, E. B.
Buchanan,	Forney,	Negley,	Thomas, J. R.
Bunnell,	Gallinger,	Norwood,	Throckmorton,
Burnes,	Gibson, C. H.	Oates,	Townshend,
Bynum,	Gibson, Eustace	O'Donnell,	Trigg,
Caldwell,	Gilfillan,	O'Ferrall,	Tucker,
Collins,	Glover,	Outhwaite,	Wait,
Compton,	Green, W. J.	Parker,	Warner, A. J.
Crain,	Harmer,	Payson,	Weber,
Croxton,	Henley,	Phelps,	Wellborn.
Culberson,	Jackson,	Pierce,
Curtin,	Johnston, T. D.	Robertson,

The roll-call being completed, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having found itself without a quorum, the chairman had caused the roll to be called and now reported to the House a list of the absent members.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the names of the absentees.

The names were then read as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The report shows 69 absentees. Their names will be entered on the Journal; and as the report shows that more than a quorum is present, the committee will resume its session.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the Hall temporarily. Can not my name be entered as present?

The SPEAKER. This is a proceeding in the Committee of the Whole, and the rule requires that the names of those who failed to respond there shall be entered on the Journal.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will again take their places.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a suggestion to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. This bill comes from the Committee on Military Affairs, which is under the control of this House and is in harmony with its majority. I beg respectfully to suggest that the majority who vote upon this bill will be responsible for its condition and for its passage; and it occurs to me that there ought not to be any delay or obstruction interposed with a view to prevent the final judgment of the House as to the proper disposition of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as I understand it, is not here by anything like the concurrent sentiment of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no minority report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. There is no minority report, as is suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], but neither is there any agreement among the members of the committee upon the floor of the House as to any of the features of the bill. This bill comes here without estimates, and even if it had estimates its provisions would meet with my profound opposition. Not only is it not reported by the unanimous voice of the committee, but I am informed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that there are a number of provisions in the bill which have never been even considered by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LAIRD. Is the gentleman from Texas a member of the Committee on Military Affairs? I have never seen him there.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not a member of that committee, but I am a member of this House, and I have seen the amendments put upon the bill here.

Mr. LAIRD. Can we count upon that side of the House giving us a vote if the amendment now pending is withdrawn?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No, sir; because I am opposed to this bill. I am willing to stand by the contract as construed by Secretary Stanton and the legislation of 1865. I believe that the range of our pension legislation is broad enough. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], a member of the majority of this House, proposes to filibuster against a bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, then I shall insist that he shall have an opportunity to make an explanation. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. The Committee of the Whole having risen after the vote was announced, and no quorum having voted, is not the case exactly as if no vote had been taken?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the Committee of the Whole resumes its session exactly as it was at the time the roll was called, when a vote was being taken by tellers on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But the vote was announced by the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the practice to be as the Chair has stated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But the previous count was completed, although no quorum was developed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the Committee of the Whole now resumes the count at the point which had been reached when the roll was called.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That vote was announced by the Chair, and no quorum voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is the practice in a case of this kind to continue the count.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a question of order. Is it in order to have discussion proceeding on the floor while the vote is being taken by tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky stated that he rose to a question of order. The Chair, confessing his inexperience, is always anxious to hear any suggestion made by any gentleman in regard to the rules.

The tellers (having completed the count) reported—ayes 127, noes 72.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BRAGG addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WHITE] will withhold his amendment for a moment, the Chair will first recognize the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. BRAGG], who desires to submit a proposition.

Mr. BRAGG. With a view of disposing of this question and making the bill conform, as I think, to the views of nearly all the members of the House——

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House debate is not in order.

Mr. BRAGG. I was not debating; I was simply stating what I desire unanimous consent to offer at this time without waiting to go through the bill. I propose to offer a proposition in the nature of a substitute for the whole bill, changing its verbiage and covering the act of 1861. This, I think, will be satisfactory to a majority of the House; indeed I hope the vote upon it will be almost unanimous.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let it be read, the right to object being reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill just sent up by him be accepted as a substitute for the pending bill.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has the right to offer it as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair would suggest if the gentleman offers it as a substitute the present bill must first be gone through with and perfected before the substitute can be voted upon. The gentleman from Wisconsin, however, asks unanimous consent to submit the proposition now.

Mr. BRAGG. Without waiting for further discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the proposed substitute to be read, and will then ask if there be objection.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary question. What has become of the amendment which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WHITE] sent up?

The CHAIRMAN. Unless unanimous consent be given to the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin, the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota will be in order. If the gentleman from Minnesota objects, his amendment will now be read.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. I will not do that.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the gentleman from Wisconsin has the right to offer the substitute now, though the Committee of the Whole can not vote upon it until the amendments pending to the section are disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first entertain amendments to the pending section, unless by unanimous consent this proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin be accepted.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let that proposition be read before objection is asked for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposition sent to the desk by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

That all soldiers of the late war who served as enlisted men for two years under the act of July 22, 1861, and afterwards were discharged to receive promotion and receive commissions as officers in the Army, shall be paid the bounty which was withheld from them on account of their being so commissioned and mustered, the same as they would have been entitled to receive had they completed their term of enlistment without promotion and received an honorable discharge.

SEC. 2. That all advance payments of bounty, or balances of the same, which were deducted from the pay of enlisted men, by reason of their having been discharged for promotion, after having re-enlisted as veterans, shall be repaid to such as are entitled thereto by the provisions of this act; and in case of the death of the officer or soldier entitled to the benefits of this act, the amount of money found due him shall be paid to his widow, heirs, or legal representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums due in each individual case.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to this proposition?

Mr. NELSON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WHITE] will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the first section of the bill the following:

"And provided further, That all volunteer soldiers who re-enlisted as veteran volunteers, and were commissioned officers in the Army, and who were discharged on the order of the War Department for the reason of being rendered supernumerary on consolidation, shall be paid the bounty due them had they been mustered out for any other reason."

The amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, was rejected; there being—ayes 25, noes 85.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to gentlemen on the other side that we are willing to stay here longer. They need not rise if they do not wish to do so.

Mr. BRAGG. At 5 o'clock a recess must be taken under the order of the House.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BRAGG that the committee rise, there were—ayes 85, noes 71.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise is agreed to; but the Chair will state that, as the hour of 5 o'clock has arrived, the committee, in pursuance of the previous order of the House, would rise at any rate.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer army, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, in pursuance of its previous order, takes a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at half past 7 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by the Clerk, Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr., who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 5, 1886.

SIR: I hereby designate Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

Mr. MCMILLIN accordingly took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution under which the House assembles to-night.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 27, 1886.

Resolved, That Tuesday and Wednesday, 4th and 5th of May next, after the expiration of the morning hour on each of such days, be, and are hereby, set apart for the consideration of such general bills as may then be upon the Calendars of the House reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, consideration to be in the order designated by the committee, and not to interfere with general appropriation bills; and that a recess be had at 5 o'clock p. m. to 7.30 p. m. on each of said days, and evening sessions be devoted to said purpose.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for present consideration from the Calendar the bill (H. R. 7634) to increase the efficiency of the line of the Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. I would inquire if that is the bill which was under consideration when the House took a recess?

Mr. STEELE. That is not the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was no bill under consideration in the House. The Committee of the Whole was considering a bill at the time of the recess to-day.

Mr. NELSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the order of business in progress when the House took a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us dispose of the bill under consideration where we left off.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The business left off at the time of the recess was in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. There has been no motion made on the part of any member of the Committee on Military Affairs or of the House to go into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of that bill, which can only be reached in committee.

Mr. STEELE. The bill I called up is on the House Calendar.

Mr. BLAND. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill which was the unfinished business at the time of the recess?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would not be in order, until this bill is disposed of in the absence of any motion to that effect, this bill having been called up prior to any motion to go into Committee of the Whole, unless the gentleman from Indiana withdraws his motion.

The Chair will state to the gentleman from Nebraska that the order under which the House assembles to-night provides that the bills shall be considered in the order designated by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Clerk will report the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BLAND. This bill is subject to the point of order that it should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEELE. It is not subject to the point of order, as it does not increase expenses. It is true that it requires an appropriation for the Army; but in no case does it increase expenses.

Mr. BLAND. It appropriates money.

Mr. RANDALL. The question is whether it requires an appropriation to be made. It may involve an appropriation of money without being subject to the point of order; but if it requires an appropriation to be made it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. It fixes the salary of all the officers of the Army.

Mr. HEWITT. But that does not appropriate any money.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana not to bring this bill up now. There is no quorum present. We adjourned on another bill because we had not a quorum, and perhaps there is not likely to be introduced a bill at this session on the subject of the Army more important than this one. It makes changes, and is in fact a complete reorganization of the Army. It is in many particulars the same bill that was considered in the Senate, and failed after a week's discussion.

Mr. STEELE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it is nothing like it.

Mr. RANDALL. Without material distinction it is the same. While this differs in some particulars, it is in many respects like the other.

Mr. STEELE. It is very different. In the first place it decreases expenses while the other increases them.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; the other proposed to increase the Army to thirty thousand, and that feature is not here.

Mr. STEELE. No. There is no increase in this bill; but, on the contrary, there will be a decrease of over $100,000 a year.

Mr. RANDALL. I only desire to say that I am unwilling to part from the consideration of the bill lately before the House in view of the fact that this afternoon we could do nothing in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Can we proceed with the other bill without a quorum?

Mr. RANDALL. We can not proceed at all without consent unless there be a quorum present.

Mr. STEELE. I understand that we took a recess by reason of a prior order of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I will demand a quorum on this bill. The gentleman may as well be aware of that fact now, for there is no use to ask us to consider a long bill like this, and a measure of such importance as this, in the absence of a quorum of the House.

Mr. STEELE. I dislike to undertake to go on with the bill where the objections are not made known. If the gentleman will make known what objection he has to the bill a statement may obviate it; but there is nothing now before us to show what ground of objection gentleman may have.

Mr. RANDALL. The objection I have to it is that a bill like this, for the reorganization of the Army of the United States, should not be considered at an evening session without a quorum; and I think that is a valid objection.

Mr. STEELE. This bill has been on the Calendar since April 6, with a report explaining each section of it. I am very sorry that enough members have not read it to insist on going on with it. I would like very much indeed to explain the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that. I am willing to sit here and listen to the gentleman explaining the bill. But whenever a vote is reached, it must be proceeded with by a quorum.

Mr. STEELE. There is no question about that. Any gentleman can demand a quorum. But gentlemen need not object to the bill without knowing anything about it.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to the gentleman from Indiana speaking as long as he wishes to explain the bill; but I thought it was due to him to make the statement I did.

Mr. STEELE. I do not desire to make a speech, but I would like gentlemen to point out objections which they may think lie against the bill, and I shall then be happy to answer those objections; or, if any objectionable feature in the bill is shown, to strike it out.

Mr. BLAND. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman has not waived the point of order. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] desires to make a statement.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Indiana has requested that items in the bill which may be objectionable to members may be pointed out. I do not know that I can do that. I have figured on it all day myself, and I give it as my deliberate judgment that the bill would increase the cost of the Army half a million dollars only. I shall show some point on which I base that statement.

Mr. STEELE. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. PRICE. You asked members to point out objections to the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to make this suggestion. I concur fully in the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in regard to this bill, that we can not expect to pass upon a bill of this kind at a night session.

Mr. RANDALL. Without a quorum.

Mr. ROGERS. In the second place I wish to say I would be delighted to hear this bill explained; because, like almost every other member of the House, I feel in this position, that it is utterly impracticable for any of us to read all of the bills and all of the reports that are before us. And I want to suggest another thing. If the gentleman from Indiana expects to get out of the frying-pan by leaving this bill because of the want of a quorum to take up the other one, I want to serve notice on him that when he gets out he will be in the fire, because I shall insist upon a quorum on that bill.

Mr. LORE. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. STEELE. I make the point that the gentleman from Delaware can not take me off my feet for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. Then I insist on my point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I would inquire of the Chair if a motion to adjourn is not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is in order if the gentleman from Indiana yields the floor. Whether he yields it or not, the point of order is made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that the bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. Pending that the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE] moves that the House adjourn. That motion the Chair thinks is in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Delaware that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 42, noes 62.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that the bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order on subdivision 3 of Rule XXIII, which reads as follows:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriaiton to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole.

This bill in section 27 provides:

That captains and lieutenants of the Army shall be entitled to the pay herein stated after their respective designations.

Then it proceeds:

Captain, $1,800 per year.
Assistant surgeon, having the rank of lieutenant, $1,500 per year.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a proposition involving a tax or a charge upon the people of the country. While the bill may not directly appropriate the money, still it constitutes a salary and claim to be paid out of the Federal Treasury which could be enforced against the Government. Therefore it is a tax or a charge upon the people.

There is another portion of this bill also which I think is amenable to this rule. Section 18 provides:

That the Secretary of War shall cause to be sold at public auction any surplus cavalry horses that may not be required for military purposes.

In that section 18 there is a disposition of public property that also comes within the provisions of the rule. It is an appropriation of public property, and—

All proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payment out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole.

Clearly this bill constitutes a tax. It establishes salaries or pay of these officers, and whether the bill in terms makes an appropriation or not it will require an appropriation and constitutes a claim against the Government, and therefore under subdivision 3 of Rule XXIII must first be considered in Committee of the Whole, because it involves a tax or charge upon the people in the way of creating offices and fixing salaries.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Missouri admits that this bill does not make an appropriation. He has referred to section 27. Under the present law captains of infantry, cavalry, and artillery draw $1,800 to $2,800 per year, according to the longevity pay they get. This bill proposes to make their pay equal, and decreases the amount that is now paid to captains mounted by $200 a year.

They are already provided for by law, and they are estimated for and appropriated for every year. They are a part of the establishment of this Government. The section to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] refers, relating to cavalry horses, is also in the line of economy. If any gentleman will take the trouble to look at the report he will see that the saving on forage alone is over $80,000 a year.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will permit me, the question is not whether the bill increases or decreases expenditures. The bill itself constitutes a tax upon the people by creating salaries of officers. The bill involves the tax or charge; whether that tax be more or less is a question not involved in this controversy at all.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, under subdivision 3 of Rule XXI all motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people must receive their first consideration in Committee of the Whole. That is the first ground enumerated in the rule, and it is a sufficient ground in this case. But in the Forty-fourth Congress, under Speaker Kerr, the old rule received a construction which was adhered to by subsequent Speakers and to which I want to call the attention of the Chair. Speaker Kerr held that in order to bring a bill or other proposition within the rule it was not necessary that it should clearly provide for an increase of expenditure, but that in order to exempt a proposition from the point of order it must appear upon its face that it would reduce expenditure. That, I say, was the construction of the old rule. But it is not necessary in this case to go back to that. If the Chair will look at the first clause of subdivision 3 of Rule XXIII he will see that this bill, involving as it does a tax or charge upon the people, necessarily comes within that rule and is subject to the point of order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I notice on page 313 of the Manual a note which is of importance in connection with this question: "Where a bill may incidentally involve expense but does not directly require an appropriation, it does not necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole." Several references are made.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I yield for the point of order to be decided.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I have heard this point of order which has been made, and I am very frank to say I do not think there is anything in it as a point of order; and I think it comes too late even if it were a good point. It is too late to make a point of order on a bill after the bill has been read without objection to the House and its consideration has commenced.

Mr. BLAND. Well, Mr. Chairman, I made the point——

Mr. BRAGG. I do not yield the floor just at this moment, Mr. Chairman. I am a little too tired to be excessively good-natured, or else I would. The bill was ordered to be read by the House, and the proceeding for its consideration has already commenced, and can not be interrupted by a point of order, which should have been interposed at the beginning, if at all. So much for that.

Now, upon the merits of the bill, the point of order also fails. I have heard that rule read, and it is like the Constitution of the United States—everybody reads it when it does not "run by his farm;" everybody wants to use it when he thinks it will promote his own purposes. It is a tremendous obstacle, always ready to be raised. Let me say why I think it does not apply in this case. This bill creates no fact which is liable to impose any obligation on the Government.

Why? Because the fact already exists. The fact is not originated by this bill. If this bill created any offices to be filled by salaried officers, then there might be some ground for the objection; but this bill creates no office at all. It simply deals with offices that are already created and already provided for by law, with salaries already fixed; it simply makes a graduation of salaries which already exist, without creating any new salary or imposing any new tax or creating any new liability on the part of the Government. For these reasons, I maintain that the point of order does not attach.

Mr. BLAND. Of course, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to make a point of order on a bill until the bill is read, and I was on my feet before the conclusion of the reading and made the point immediately after the reading was concluded. Now, sir, I must insist that the question here is not whether this bill increases or reduces expenditures or changes existing law. It comes clearly within the rule, which provides that all motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole, because this bill does involve a tax or charge upon the people in the way of providing for the salaries of these officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that this bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] makes the point that that point of order was not raised in time. The Chair is inclined to think that is not well taken, for the reason that members would have great difficulty in ascertaining what the nature of a bill or other proposition was before it had been read, and it would be a great hardship upon the House to require members to determine in advance before a measure was read whether it was subject to the point of order or not. The Chair thinks, therefore, that the point made by the gentleman from Missouri was made in time. The Chair is of opinion that if a bill makes an appropriation of money directly or forces an appropriation, if it is such a bill as would require an increased appropriation or an appropriation not now provided for by law, it should be first considered in Committee of the Whole. The Chair is unable to see thus far that this bill does that. It is a regulation concerning the Army; but the Chair is unable to see that the bill itself makes an appropriation or provides new machinery which would require an appropriation if the bill were passed. The Clerk will read from the House Journal of May 17, 1884, page 1247, a ruling made by Mr. Speaker CARLISLE upon this subject in the last Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. TUCKER, the House took up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6074) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of the State of Texas, and to attach a part of the Indian Territory to said districts, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary on the 18th of March last, and referred to the House Calendar.

The same having been read,

Mr. JOHN H. ROGERS made the point of order that under clause 3 of Rule XXIII the said bill must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

After debate on the said point of order,

The Speaker overruled the same, on the ground that under previous decisions it had been held that unless the bill expressly made an appropriation or directly required one to be made, the rule quoted did not apply, the fact that execution of the law might involve an additional expenditure of money not being sufficient to carry the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REAGAN. May I say a word upon this question before the Chair rules upon it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the gentleman from Texas proceeds the Chair will say, in order that the gentleman may direct his remarks to this point, that if it could be shown there would be made under this bill an appropriation out of the Treasury, the necessity for which does not exist under the present law, and which would be in excess of appropriations required by existing law, the Chair would be inclined to sustain the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. The point which is made here, as I understand, is not that there is an appropriation made in the bill; that is not the point——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas will suspend a moment until the Chair has read a ruling which was made by the Speaker at the present session upon a question analogous to this.

Mr. REAGAN. What I wanted to call attention to was that these decisions which the Chair cites relate to the point whether the bill in question made an appropriation or not; but that is not the point here.

Mr. BLAND. The question is, if a new bill is presented creating a new office and fixing the salary, whether that is not a subject for consideration in Committee of the Whole. If a bill is reported here creating an office and fixing the pay for that office it is a charge or tax upon the people, and the bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole. This bill creates an office and fixes a salary; therefore there is necessarily a charge upon the people. The payment of this salary can be enforced by the officer as a tax upon the people.

Mr. REAGAN. I wanted to point out the difference——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] what office is created by this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the Chair will allow me to state my position. I have not been able to do so yet. The point is not at all that this bill involves an appropriation; that question I do not understand to be presented here. The point is that the bill involves a tax or charge upon the people. This is a bill for the reorganization of the Army, and it changes the character of the offices. I do not know whether it increases the number of regiments, but it does increase the number of regimental officers? Can a bill reorganizing the Army of the United States be passed without creating a charge upon the people? The question is not whether the bill makes an appropriation, but whether it creates a charge upon the people.

Mr. LONG. That is the very question that has been decided in all these precedents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read a ruling made recently by the Speaker of the House upon a bill for redistricting the State of Missouri, making additional judicial districts. On that bill the Speaker was called upon to decide a question analogous to the one now before the House. The Clerk will read the decision in that case as it appears on page 3967 of the RECORD for the present session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires, however, to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to the rule which has heretofore been adhered to in the decision of questions of this kind. It has been uniformly held that before a point of order of this character can be sustained it must appear with certainty that an additional appropriation will be required to execute the law, if the bill should be passed. Now, it is true that this bill provides for summoning jurors and for holding courts at these additional places in certain contingencies; that is in case the county authorities provide the necessary rooms, offices, &c. But all these courts are to be held merely for the purpose of transacting the judicial business in what now constitutes one district. Civil and criminal proceedings are to be commenced in these courts; but the Chair has no means of determining that the creation of these courts will not in fact diminish the cost of litigation instead of increasing it.

It often, as the Chair knows, diminishes the costs of litigation to the citizens and the Government to have courts convenient to litigants and convenient for the trial of criminals and penal cases.

The Chair is not able to see in this bill any provision which makes it absolutely certain the cost of judicial proceeding in this Territory will be increased. On the contrary, it may be contended, and probably would be, by gentlemen, it will be diminished. When it does not appear on the face of the bill that additional appropriations will be required, but is merely a matter of argument, the Chair can not decide that such will necessarily be the case.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill upon which the decision just read was made provided for no new offices and no new salaries; it fixed no compensation for any office whatever. But here is a bill fixing the compensation of officers. I dare say if the bill relating to judicial districts in Missouri upon which the Speaker made the ruling which has been read had provided for the compensation of any judge, clerk, or other officer, the Speaker would have sent it to the Committee of the Whole, because it would have been a charge or tax upon the people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like the gentleman from Missouri to point out any provision in this bill requiring an expenditure of money which would not be required under existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. I will point that out if the gentleman will give me the opportunity to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will give the gentleman from Pennsylvania that opportunity.

Mr. REAGAN. You may say that every appropriation bill may reduce expenditures or may reduce salaries, but the fact that it provides a new salary or creates an additional office, whether great or small, whether organic or not, that is not the question, but the very fact that it does so create an additional office or provide a salary not authorized by existing law makes it amenable to the rules of this House. The question is this: Does the bill itself fix a tax or charge upon the people? If it does, then certainly it must have, under the rules, its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the Chair to state if there were found any clause in the bill providing for an increase of officers or enlisted men in excess of the number now provided by law, then the point of order would lie.

Mr. STEELE. I understand the Chair to state——

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair furthermore stated if it could be shown there was a charge upon the Treasury by this bill not provided for under existing law it would then be liable to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact there is a major provided for by this bill not authorized under existing law. That will be found in the first section. The sixth section also provides for additional men; and the twenty-first section of the bill provides for increased pay. I ask the Clerk to read an extract, which I have marked, from the report of this committee touching section 21, where it is conceded that section does in fact increase the pay beyond what is now provided for by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will read the extract referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 21 makes the pay of all sergeant-majors and quartermaster-sergeants the same as that of post-quartermaster and commissary sergeants. The sergeant-major is the most important of all the non-commissioned officers. The present law makes his pay $23 per month, while the quartermaster-sergeants receive $34. It is proposed to make the pay of all the same, $30.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be seen in the paragraph read from the report of the Committee on Military Affairs it is conceded certain officers now receiving $28 a month, if this bill shall pass will hereafter receive $34 a month.

Mr. REAGAN. The bill also increases the pay of certain captains. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that the ruling read by the Chair, I do not know by whom it was made, clearly overrules the principle laid down by Speaker Kerr in the Forty-fourth Congress, and which has been followed and sustained by every succeeding Speaker since—that it must affirmatively appear in the bill to which the point of order is made that it does not increase appropriations. That ruling, so laid down by Speaker Kerr, has never been deviated from until the ruling read by the Chair, which takes the ground it is necessary to show in order to sustain the point of order affirmatively there would be increase of expenditures.

Mr. STEELE. I hope I will be allowed to answer the points made by gentlemen on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to call attention to the fact that in section 21, so far as non-commissioned officers are concerned, this bill rearranges the salaries already provided for under existing law, and results in a saving to the Government of $2,888. In the further rearrangement of salaries provided by the bill, so far as captains are concerned there is a decrease, and not an increase.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman from Missouri is entirely right in saying this bill refers to certain officers and names certain offices, but those offices exist now. And there are certain salaries attached by law to those offices. But, sir, nothing appears in this bill to show those offices are increased, or to show there may not be a diminution both of offices and salaries.

Mr. REAGAN. If, as the result of the bill, it appears it involves an increased tax or burden upon the people it must, under the ruling heretofore followed, have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RANDALL. The very report of the committee itself concedes the fact that it does provide for such increase.

Mr. LONG. In one respect, but not in another. It does not appear the general result of the bill does not result in a diminution of offices and salaries now provided by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question.

Mr. BRADY. It appears there is to be an increase of fifty majors and sixty captains.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion, after hearing the report of the committee read, that the bill does provide for an increase in the salaries of certain grades of officers; that it is a change of existing law, and does require appropriation in excess of existing law, and therefore under the rules should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It fixes a charge for these officials which does not now exist by law. And the Chair is compelled to take notice of the existing law in that regard. Besides, the bill fixes a charge in connection with these offices which does not now exist, and the Chair so rules.

Mr. STEELE. Upon the whole the bill is not an increase under existing law. It provides the number of officers shall not be increased as now provided by law so far as appointments from civil life are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it involves a charge such as is contemplated by the rules.

Mr. STEELE. I ask the Chair not to rule finally until I can be heard.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill in the twenty-eighth section also provides for an increase.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does increase the compensation paid out of the Treasury, and is therefore liable to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. To still further strengthen the position taken by the Chair I want to read a paragraph in the twenty-eighth section of this bill bearing upon this point:

And said sum of $200 per year shall be in addition to the current yearly pay of his grade, as fixed by section 29 of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was of opinion that the duty devolved upon the party making the point of order to show affirmatively that it did change the existing law so as to increase the amount covered by the bill. This, the Chair thinks, has been done, and hence holds the point of order is well taken.

Mr. STEELE. In the case of the section just quoted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will state to him that this takes away from the officer the forage and the horse now allowed by law, and, therefore, will be found to decrease expenditures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under all of the circumstances, and in view of the sections read and the sections of the law referred to, that the bill is such as requires its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and so rules.

Mr. STEELE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to press this bill at all. I said so at the time I called it up, that if a single objection could be found and urged against it I would want to strike it out. What I do ask though is that unanimous consent may be given that some time in the future, I do not care when, we may have a day for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. If that is made subject to appropriation and revenue bills and prior orders I imagine there will be no objection.

Mr. STEELE. Of course not to interfere with prior orders or revenue or appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What day would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. STEELE. Any day that may be fixed upon. I do not wish to consume the time of the House to find out what day is unassigned, but the first one that is not assigned by previous orders I ask may be fixed for the consideration of this bill with the exceptions that have been stated.

Mr. REAGAN. One of the most important bills that we will have to consider at this session was assigned for the 13th of April last, but has been postponed from day to day, and I do not want anything more to interfere with that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that that being a pending order would be excepted by the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. REAGAN. Not in the form in which it was made. I do not want anything to interfere with that bill.

Mr. STEELE. I will say not to interfere with any prior orders.

Mr. BRAGG. Well, then, fix the 19th of May. I am informed that day is unassigned.

Mr. STEELE. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill be fixed for the 19th day of May, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills, or any prior orders. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill under consideration this afternoon, House bill No. 7895.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7835) for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer army and for other purposes.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending, the Chair is informed. The first thing in order will be to read the second section of the bill for consideration.

Mr. ROGERS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "so," in line 7 of the first section of the bill, insert the word "promoted," and strike out all the balance of the section, so that if amended it will read that all enlisted men in the naval service of the United States or in its Marine Corps.

Mr. ROGERS. I had lost sight of the amendments which had been appended to that section, and will withdraw that amendment and propose another in its stead. I desire to offer as a substitute for the first section what I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the entire first section of the bill and insert:

"That all soldiers of the late war who re-enlisted as veteran volunteers and afterward were discharged to receive promotion and receive commission as officers in the Army shall be paid all installments of veteran bounty which were withheld from them on account of their being so promoted."

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the words to be striken out will be reported.

The remainder of the section as proposed to be stricken out was read.

Mr. LAIRD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LAIRD. For information simply.

The CHAIRMAN. That could only be done by consent, and the committee can not give unanimous consent, as by order of the House, all debate was limited upon this section and all amendments that may be offered to it.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Some gentlemen around me have made the inquiry if this amendment of mine is adopted whether it does not supersede everything except what is embraced in the amendment itself, with the addition of the word "promoted," after the word "so," in the seventh line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only reply that gentlemen, having heard the amendment read, must judge for themselves of its effect. The words proposed to be stricken out have been read by the Clerk.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask that the amendment may be again read for the information of the committee.

There being no objection, the amendment was again read.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Was not a motion to strike out the two provisos to this section made and voted down to-day, and does not the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas include the same motion?

The CHAIRMAN. A portion of the same, but not the whole, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I understand it includes both, and both were once refused to be stricken out by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to refer to the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. If permitted, I will respond to the gentleman by saying this is not the same amendment. The amendment now offered embraces the striking out of both of the provisos, but it likewise embraces the amendment of that which preceded them; so it is entirely different from what has already been voted upon.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 67.

Mr. ROGERS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 18, noes 82.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum has not voted; and, in accordance with the rule, the Chair will cause the roll to be called so that the absentees may be noted.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Adams, G. E.	Dunn,	King,	Singleton,

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to state I am informed there is sickness in the family of my colleague [Mr. LAWLER], and I ask that he be excused.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that excuses can not be received in committee. They may be made in the House when the Speaker is in the chair.

The committee rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CRISP reported the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of certain officers in the volunteer army, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and reported the names of the absentees to the House to be entered on the Journal.

The names of the absentees were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole House has reported that on a call of the committee, the question being made that no quorum had voted, 156 members had responded to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. STORM] is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] moves that there be a call of the House. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] moves that the House adjourn. The question is first on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. And upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 44, nays 109, not voting 169; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, objected, but immediately withdrew the objection, and the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I move there be a call of the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now take a recess until fifty-nine minutes after 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will suspend until the Clerk reports the pairs.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. JACKSON.
Mr. COLE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.
Mr. FISHER with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.
Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.
Mr. FORNEY with Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. CRAIN with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.
Mr. BURNES with Mr. BUCHANAN.
Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. PARKER.
Mr. CURTIN with Mr. NEGLEY.
Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. O'DONNELL.
Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. GALLINGER.
Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. PIRCE.
Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. DAVENPORT.
Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, with Mr. MCCOMAS.
Mr. FORAN with Mr. SCRANTON.
Mr. CROXTON with Mr. DORSEY.

The following-named members were announced as paired for the day:
Mr. BARNES with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.
Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. FARQUHAR.
Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. THOMPSON.
Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. ROMEIS.
Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. KLEINER with Mr. BAKER.
Mr. ROCKWELL with Mr. TURNER.
Mr. HISCOCK with Mr. HERBERT.
Mr. BARKSDALE with Mr. ATKINSON.
Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.
Mr. WILLIS with Mr. MARTIN.
Mr. WILKINS with Mr. GROSVENOR.
Mr. RIGGS with Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois.
Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. HITT.
Mr. STORM with Mr. LA FOLLETTE.
Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. MURPHY with Mr. PAYSON.
Mr. OATES with Mr. CASWELL.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. HARMER.
Mr. GLOVER with Mr. WAIT.
Mr. TUCKER with Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin.
Mr. MCKENNA with Mr. BYNUM.
Mr. BARRY with Mr. VAN SCHAICK.
Mr. DAWSON with Mr. E. B. TAYLOR.
Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, with Mr. PHELPS.
Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. MILLIKEN.
Mr. REID, of North Carolina, with Mr. GILFILLAN.
Mr. HALL with Mr. KETCHAM.
Mr. FORD with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, with Mr. LIBBEY.
Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman——
Mr. BRAGG. Regular order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] is recognized.
Mr. OATES. I am paired with Mr. CASWELL, but I vote to make a quorum.
Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to know if a call of the House is now in order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is pending.
Mr. CUTCHEON. I move a call of the House.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that that motion was made, and pending that a motion was made to adjourn.
Mr. REED, of Maine. That motion could not be pending while the pairs were being read.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion was pending, and a motion was made that the House adjourn. That having been voted down, the motion for the call of the House recurs, and in that way it is pending.
The Chair will lay before the House a personal request, with the statement that it was made at an early hour this evening but has been overlooked until now. Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, asks to be excused from the evening session by reason of sickness. Is there objection?
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] for a call of the House.
Mr. FREDERICK. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues Mr. MURPHY and Mr. HALL are both unwell.
Several MEMBERS. Regular order!
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on a motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin for a call of the House.
The question was taken, and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. ROGERS. I call for a division.
The question was then taken by tellers, and there were, ayes 96, noes 35.
A call of the House was therefore ordered.
Mr. ROGERS (at five minutes before 10 o'clock p. m.). I move that the House do now adjourn.
The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 50, noes 86.
Mr. ROGERS. I call for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being only 26 in favor thereof—not one-fifth of the last vote.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now call the roll.
Mr. BRAGG. I believe the absentees have already been called; and I submit that the doors should now be closed, and the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to bring in the absentees.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the call of the roll to ascertain the absentees was in Committee of the Whole. The roll-call had since was on the motion to adjourn. A call of the House has now been ordered. The doors will be closed, and the Clerk will call the roll.
Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it now in order to move to adjourn?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn has just been voted down; and no business has intervened; therefore the motion is not now in order. The Clerk will call the roll.
A MEMBER. For what.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. So that members present may respond and that the names of absentees may be noted.
The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams, G. E.	Dorsey,	Kelley,	Sessions,
Adams, J. J.	Dougherty,	Ketcham,	Seymour,
Aiken,	Dunn,	King,	Shaw,

Mr. BEACH. Out of consideration for the reading clerk, I ask unanimous consent that the recapitulation of the names be dispensed with.
Mr. GROSVENOR. I object. I would not object if the request came from any other man in the House.
Mr. BEACH. It is no special favor to me.
Mr. DUNHAM. I would like to say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that we have but one reading clerk here this evening and he is almost worn out. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.
Mr. BEACH. The objection comes in very good part from the gentleman from Ohio.
Mr. GROSVENOR. I was about to withdraw my objection, but after the remark of the gentleman from New York I give him notice that he does not crack his whip over my head either here or elsewhere.
The Clerk proceeded to read the names, but was interrupted by,
Mr. LONG, who said: I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the names be dispensed with.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection that order will be made.
Mr. ROGERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.
Mr. LAIRD. I believe I had recognition. I desire to move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize gentlemen in their order. The names of the absentees must first be called.
The Clerk called the absentees, as follows:
Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois: No excuse offered.
Mr. ADAMS, of New York: No excuse offered.
Mr. AIKEN: No excuse offered.
Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts: No excuse offered.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas: No excuse offered.
Mr. ATKINSON: No excuse offered.
Mr. BAKER: No excuse offered.
Mr. BALLENTINE.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state for the information of the House, as this proceeding seems not to be understood, that the roll is now being called in order that excuses may be made for those who are absent.
Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR. My colleague [Mr. BALLENTINE] is detained at his room by sickness. I ask that he be excused.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to excusing the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BALLENTINE]? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARBOUR: No excuse offered.
Mr. BARKSDALE: No excuse offered.
Mr. BARNES.
Mr. CLEMENTS. My colleague is absent on account of sickness, and I therefore move he be excused.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. BARRY: No excuse offered.
Mr. BELMONT: No excuse offered.
Mr. BLANCHARD: No excuse offered.
Mr. BOUTELLE: No excuse offered.
Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.
Mr. STEELE. My colleague is absent on account of severe sickness in his family. He is absent by leave of the House.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be noted.
Mr. BUCHANAN: No excuse offered.
Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. OSBORNE. My colleague is absent by leave of the House.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Whenever that is the case it will be taken notice of.
Mr. BURLEIGH: No excuse offered.
Mr. BURNES: No excuse offered.
Mr. BUTTERWORTH: No excuse offered.
Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL.
Mr. VIELE. I move my colleague be excused on account of sickness.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. CASWELL: No excuse offered.
Mr. COBB.
Mr. MATSON. I move my colleague be excused. He has been in bad health for several months.
The motion was disagreed to.
Mr. COLE.
Mr. CRISP. I move the gentleman be excused, as he is in bad health.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. COLLINS.
Mr. LONG. I move Mr. COLLINS be excused on account of sickness in his family.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. COMPTON: No excuse offered.
Mr. COX: No excuse offered.
Mr. CRAIN: No excuse offered.
Mr. CROXTON: No excuse offered.
Mr. CULBERSON: No excuse offered.
Mr. CURTIN: No excuse offered.
Mr. DARGAN.
Mr. HEMPHILL. I move the gentleman be excused on account of sickness.
A MEMBER. How sick?
Mr. HEMPHILL. I have been informed he is sick.
Mr. CUTCHEON. How long has he been sick?
Mr. HEMPHILL. We know he is a gentleman of frail constitution and that he has been sick.
The motion was disagreed to.
Mr. DAVENPORT: No excuse offered.
Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida: No excuse offered.
Mr. DINGLEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. DOCKERY: No excuse offered.
Mr. DORSEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. DOUGHERTY: No excuse offered.
Mr. DUNN.
Mr. ROGERS. The Sergeant-at-Arms informs me Mr. DUNN sent a message to the House that he be excused on account of sickness. I move, therefore, he be excused.
The motion was disagreed to.
Mr. EDEN: No excuse offered.
Mr. ELY: No excuse offered.
Mr. FARQUHAR.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. Mr. FARQUHAR stops at the same house I do, and I know part of his family are sick, and have been to-day. I move he be excused.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. FINDLAY: No excuse offered.
Mr. FISHER: No excuse offered.
Mr. FORAN: No excuse offered.
Mr. FORD: No excuse offered.
Mr. FORNEY.
Mr. OATES. My colleague is absent by leave of the House.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. That fact will be noted.
Mr. PERKINS. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not usual to entertain that motion until the present call is made.
Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, Mr. GALLINGER, whose name I understand was called as being absent, was called home to-day by the sickness of his daughter.
Mr. GAY: No excuse offered.
Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland: No excuse offered.
Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia: No excuse offered.
Mr. GILFILLAN: No excuse offered.
Mr. GLASS.
Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. GLASS, is sick and unable to attend the night session of the House. I move that he be excused.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. GLOVER: No excuse offered.
Mr. GOFF: No excuse offered.
Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey: No excuse offered.
Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina: No excuse offered.
Mr. HALL.
Mr. FREDERICK. Mr. Speaker, Mr. HALL left the House sick, and I move that he be excused.
The motion was not agreed to.
Mr. HAMMOND.
Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. HAMMOND is detained in his room on account of sickness, and I move that he be excused.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Has he sent for a doctor? [Laughter.]
Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not know; but he has been absent two or three days, as the House knows, and is suffering with quite a sore throat to-night.
Mr. BLAND. I think he ought not to be here to-night; he is not at all well.
The motion that Mr. HAMMOND be excused was agreed to.
Mr. HARMER: No excuse offered.
Mr. HARRIS: No excuse offered.
Mr. HAYNES: No excuse offered.
Mr. HEARD: No excuse offered.
Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa: No excuse offered.
Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina: No excuse offered.
Mr. BENNETT. My colleague, Mr. HENDERSON, is detained by reason of the sickness of one of his children, and I make that statement upon my personal responsibility. [Laughter.]
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is the gentleman responsible for the sickness of the child or for the absence?
Mr. BENNETT. No, sir; for the truthfulness of the statement.
The motion that Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, be excused, was agreed to.
Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, owing to the sickness of all the members of the House who are absent to-night, I move that they all be excused.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is unusual to entertain that motion at this stage of the proceedings.
Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois: No excuse offered.
Mr. HENLEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. HERBERT: No excuse offered.
Mr. HIESTAND: No excuse offered.
Mr. HITT: No excuse offered.
Mr. HUTTON: No excuse offered.
Mr. IRION: No excuse offered.
Mr. JACKSON: No excuse offered.
Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana: No excuse offered.
Mr. JONES, of Texas.
Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. JONES, of Texas, be excused on account of advanced age. [Laughter.]
The motion was not agreed to.
Mr. KELLEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. KETCHAM.
Mr. HISCOCK. I move that my colleague, Mr. KETCHAM, be excused. He is detained at home on account of important business.
The motion was not agreed to.
Mr. KING.
Mr. VAN EATON. I ask that Mr. KING, of Louisiana, be excused on account of the breakage of the levees of the Mississippi River. [Laughter.]
Mr. LA FOLLETTE.
Mr. GUENTHER. I suppose in consequence of the absence of Mr. LA FOLLETTE that he is sick. I hope he will be excused.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman moves that his colleague be excused.
The motion was not agreed to.
Mr. LE FEVRE: No excuse offered.
Mr. LIBBEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. LOVERING.
Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, the name of Mr. LOVERING, I understand, has just been called. I wish to state that he left the House this afternoon before the recess, complaining of being quite unwell, and since we have come to this evening session I learn that he is not able to be here. I therefore move that he be excused.
The motion was not agreed to.
Mr. LYMAN: No excuse offered.
Mr. MARKHAM.
Mr. LOUTTIT. The health of my colleague, Mr. MARKHAM, is such that he has not been out an evening since he has been a member of the House, and I ask that he be excused.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 70, noes 7.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I understand the name of Mr. LANHAM has been called. He has been in delicate health——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Texas is recorded as being present.

Mr. MARTIN: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCADOO: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is well known that Mr. MCKINLEY is ill, and I move that he be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Ohio has leave of absence, which fact will be taken notice of by the officers of the House.

Mr. MILLS: No excuse offered.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. BUCK. I move that my colleague, Mr. MITCHELL, be excused, as I have just learned from the gentleman from New York within the last half hour that he is unable to be present.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MORROW.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I move that Mr. MORROW be excused. He has been detained at home on account of the sickness of his wife, and she has been made sick by a very severe misfortune since she came to this city.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MULLER.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not fancy that Mr. MULLER, of New York, can complain that he is not well; in fact, I will make affidavit to the fact. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Shall the gentleman from New York be excused?

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MURPHY.

Mr. FREDERICK. I move that Mr. MURPHY be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. NEGLEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. NORWOOD: No excuse offered.

Mr. O'DONNELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. O'FERRALL: No excuse offered.

Mr. O'HARA: No excuse offered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania: No excuse offered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri.

Mr. VAN EATON. I move that Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, be excused.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 50, noes 68.

So the motion of Mr. VAN EATON was not agreed to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE: No excuse offered.

Mr. OWEN: No excuse offered.

Mr. PARKER: No excuse offered.

Mr. PAYSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. PETTIBONE.

Mr. HOUK. I move that my colleague [Mr. PETTIBONE] be excused; he arrived in the city very tired this evening.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS: No excuse offered.

Mr. PIRCE: No excuse offered.

Mr. RANNEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina.

Mr. SKINNER. I move that Mr. REID be excused. Ordinarily he is a very prompt man. I do not know what detains him now, but it must be some great necessity.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. ROBERTSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. ROCKWELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. ROMEIS: No excuse offered.

Mr. SCRANTON.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of New York. Mr. SCRANTON is absent by leave of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That fact will be noted.

Mr. SESSIONS: No excuse offered.

Mr. SEYMOUR: No excuse offered.

Mr. SHAW: No excuse offered.

Mr. SINGLETON.

Mr. MORGAN. My colleague Mr. SINGLETON, it is well known, is in delicate health, and it would not be proper to bring him out tonight. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMALLS: No excuse offered.

Mr. SNYDER: No excuse offered.

Mr. SPOONER: No excuse offered.

Mr. SPRIGGS: No excuse offered.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas: No excuse offered.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont: No excuse offered.

Mr. ST. MARTIN: No excuse offered.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. I have just received a message informing me that my colleague Mr. STONE, is sick and not able to attend. I move that he be excused.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 57.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SWINBURNE: No excuse offered.

Mr. TARSNEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Judge TAYLOR left the House on account of severe illness, and has been ill for several days. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 84, noes 9.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois: No excuse offered.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin.

Mr. GUENTHER. I move that my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He has already been excused.

Mr. THROCKMORTON: No excuse offered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND: No excused offered.

Mr. TRIGG: No excuse offered.

Mr. TUCKER: No excuse offered.

Mr. TURNER: No excuse offered.

Mr. WADE: No excuse offered.

Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move that my colleague, Mr. WADSWORTH, be excused. He is known to all of us to be in delicate health, and he is advanced in years.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WAIT.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that Mr. WAIT be excused on account of his age.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 96, noes 2.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio: No excuse offered.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska: No excuse offered.

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Speaker, I understood that my colleague, Mr. MULLER, had been excused. I now desire to say that he has been an invalid during the whole session, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, was called and answered to his name.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that Mr. ST. MARTIN be excused on account of his age. He is as old probably as any man in this House, and it is dangerous for him to be out at night.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 92, noes 5.

Mr. WEBER: No excuse offered.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Speaker, I understand from the Sergeant-at-Arms that my colleague, Mr. BARBOUR, is very much indisposed, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I would inquire of the Chair if my colleague, Mr. FORNEY, is not excused by the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask if my colleague, Mr. KELLEY, has been excused?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he is not.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Then I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WELLBORN.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I have a note saying that Mr. WELLBORN is ill, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEST: No excuse offered.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota: No excuse offered.

Mr. WILKINS: No excuse offered.

Mr. WINANS: No excuse offered.

Mr. WISE: No excuse offered.

Mr. WOODBURN: No excuse offered.

Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have an impression that Mr. WILLIS'S wife is quite ill, and as everybody knows how punctually Mr. WILLIS has attended here in the discharge of his duties, I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I can state of my personal knowledge that my colleague, Mr. MURPHY, is sick, and has been for several days. For that reason I move that he be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. ATKINSON, is lame, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, I again move that Mr. KING, of Louisiana, be excused. I hold in my hand a telegram just received announcing that there is a fresh break in the Mississippi River. [Laughter.]

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr.

BRAGG] has sent up a resolution, which will be read, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas.

The resolution offered by Mr. BRAGG was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are now absent without the leave of the House.

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Has the roll-call disclosed the presence of a quorum?

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DUNHAM. The House ought to know the fact. It ought to be announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can not interpose against a motion to adjourn.

Mr. KETCHAM. It is not a motion, it is a request for information, which is necessary in order that members may vote intelligently.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a request for information that could not affect the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] that the call of the roll discloses the fact that there is a quorum present.

Mr. LAIRD. I desire to move that all further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order; there is another motion pending.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ROGERS, there were—ayes 66, noes 77.

Mr. ROGERS. I call for tellers.

Mr. BRAGG. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 19 voting in favor thereof.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I now move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order that a resolution has been presented, action upon which was suspended simply to take the vote on the motion to adjourn, and that the next thing in order is to submit that resolution to the House and have its action thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution of the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ROGERS. To call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the point of order of the gentleman from Wisconsin is not well taken. It is always in order, I take it, pending a call, to move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call is in order.

Mr. LAIRD. I understood the Chair recognized me to make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas was recognized and made the motion.

Mr. LAIRD. I understood the Chair recognized the motion I made to the same effect pending the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was not aware of the fact that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] made the motion.

Mr. LAIRD. I move then to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to make an inquiry. The resolution which I have offered, if voted down, would be a suspension of proceedings under the call. The resolution presented that question for the consideration of the House, and I was entitled to a vote upon it. Can another proposition operating to the same effect as a negative vote upon my resolution take the place of that resolution? If the House does not choose to take further proceedings under the call, the voting down of my resolution would so declare. I presented it to the House in that form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that pending a call of the House but two motions are in order—one to dispense with further proceedings under the call and the other to adjourn. The question is on the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 69, noes 50.

Mr. BRAGG. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after a count). There are 26 voting to order the yeas and nays—not one-fifth of those who answered to their names on the last roll-call.

Mr. ROGERS. I call for a count of the other side.

Mr. BRAGG. Twenty-six is one-fifth of the last vote, is not it? Then why does the Chair say "not one-fifth of those answering to their names on the roll-call?"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A count of the other side is demanded; that will determine the question.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to have an explanation of the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore having asked for the negative vote on ordering the yeas and nays, 6 members rose.

Mr. PERKINS. I think there is a misunderstanding as to the proposition on which we are voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon ordering the yeas and nays on the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. BRAGG. That motion was put and decided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question was on ordering the yeas and nays. The affirmative side had risen and been counted; thereupon the other side was demanded——

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The other side was demanded, and the Chair was counting the other side——

Mr. BRAGG. The Chair announced that those voting to order the yeas and nays numbered 26, and said, "Not one-fifth of the last roll-call," although there was one-fifth of the last vote. The gentleman from Arkansas called for the other side——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair was proceeding to count the other side, and 6 members rose. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] then stated that gentlemen misunderstood the question. The Chair desires to take no advantage of any gentleman.

Mr. BRAGG. What I desired to understand was by what authority the Chair proceeded to take another division after the question had been decided. [Cries of "Order!"] Well, gentlemen, that sort of racket does not disturb me at all.

Mr. LAIRD. We demand that the negative vote be taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas having called for a count on the other side, those who are opposed to taking this question by yeas and nays will rise and stand till counted. [After a count.] On this question the ayes are 26, the noes 84. More than one-fifth have voted in the affirmative, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DUNHAM, there were—ayes 68, noes 80.

Mr. ROGERS demanded tellers.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not one-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Count the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no other side.

Mr. ROGERS. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BRAGG. I believe possibly that may be ruled out of order.

Mr. LAIRD. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer army, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call; upon which the yeas and nays have been called.

Mr. NELSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NELSON. The Chair is mistaken; there was not one-fifth of a quorum. There were twenty-six, and that is not one-fifth of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-six is one-fifth of those present.

Mr. NELSON. But not one-fifth of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One-fifth of those present is all that is required. The yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 63, not voting 173, as follows:

YEAS—86.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All further proceedings under the call have been dispensed with, and the doors will be reopened.

Mr. STEELE. I move by unanimous consent the pages be excused from further attendance on this evening session.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer army, and for other purposes. I understand there is a desire on the other side to offer a substitute for this bill, and if we go into the Committee of the Whole that can be done and some progress made in this matter which will be final.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to make a motion to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow. By that time we may come to some understanding. If we stay here all night doing as we have done nothing will be accomplished.

Mr. LAIRD. Oh, no!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 56.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to say in connection with the request——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Question!

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, rose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Regular order!

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This is the regular order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama insist on his motion to adjourn?

Mr. WHEELER. No; I withdraw it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Missouri is holding his motion in abeyance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the gentleman will be heard.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Regular order!

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask the gentleman to hear a brief statement.

Mr. LAIRD. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I want to say that it is the desire of those with whom I am co-operating to get a vote upon the substitute which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] proposes to offer for this bill; and for my part, and I believe that is the position of men who are opposing the bill now under consideration, if that substitute carries it will be acquiesced in and no further obstructive measures taken.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Certainly. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CANNON. I only want to know if that substitute does not omit from this bill every provision for the benefit of the private soldiers?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Hear the substitute read.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We know what is in it.

Mr. CANNON. I am satisfied that it does; and I am not willing to permit by any act of mine such an act of injustice to be done to them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the bill be read; it will show for itself.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CANNON. I will not consent by any act of mine to anything which will cut the private soldiers out of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] for a recess.

The yeas and nays were refused, only 11 members voting in favor thereof.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 62, noes 42.

Mr. BRAGG. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 21 voting therefor and 72 in opposition to the demand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is this roll-call to be taken upon the question of adjournment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 47, nays 84, not voting 191; as follows:

YEAS—47.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names of those voting.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the bill H. R. 7895.

Mr. DUNHAM. What has become of the quorum of the House that we had a short time ago?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not informed upon that subject. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. LAIRD. I insist upon my motion.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 73, noes 9.

Mr. ROGERS. Tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, 1 member only voting in favor thereof.

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. ROGERS and Mr. LAIRD were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 2.

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 61, noes 38.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. BRAGG called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered—23 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 35, nays 80, not voting 207, as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. TILLMAN. I object.

The names of the members voting were read, and the result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer army, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7895.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. CRISP in the chair) and resumed consideration of House bill 7895.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee was dividing on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]. The tellers, the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. LAIRD, and the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. ROGERS, will resume their places.

Mr. ROGERS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer as a substitute for the first section what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That all soldiers of the late war who served as enlisted men for two years under the provisions of the act of July 22, 1861, and afterward were discharged to receive promotion, and received commissions as officers in the Army, shall be paid the bounty which was withheld from them on account of their being so promoted and commissioned, the same as they would have been entitled to receive had they completed their term of enlistment without promotion and received an honorable discharge."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is this offered as a substitute for the first section, or as a substitute for the entire bill?

Mr. BRAGG. It covers the whole bill. I will next move to strike out the second section.

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be in order at this stage to move a substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer it as a substitute for the first section.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the motion was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Wisconsin to offer his amendment as a substitute for the first section, although the language is "strike out all after the enacting clause."

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman is entitled to offer it as a substitute for the whole bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state there will come a time when the gentleman can offer it as a substitute for the whole bill. The Chair does not think he can do so now while only the first section has been read for amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. I have divided my amendment into two paragraphs, and I offer that paragraph as a substitute for the first section and will make it read "strike out section 1 and insert the following"—what has just been read. I ask for a vote.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to be heard on the motion to amend.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on amendments to the first section has been exhausted, the House having put a limit on the debate. No debate is now in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I make the point of order that the order of the House only applied to the amendments pending at the time it was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the limitation of debate applied not only to amendments that were then pending, but to amendments that might thereafter be submitted. Such an order can be made under the rules of the House. It did not preclude subsequent amendments, but it precluded debate on all then pending or that might thereafter be offered to the section.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I understand the amendment is simply for the relief of the officers, and leaves the rank and file out. This is a desertion of the rank and file. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. REED, of Maine. The amendment must be reported.

Mr. CANNON. Every one understands it. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the amendment being again read.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the amendment to the first section has not been read. There was a proposed substitute for the whole bill read.

The CHAIRMAN. As there still seems to be some misapprehension as to what was the effect of the proposition, the Chair will direct that the substitute as proposed for the first section be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 1 and insert the following:

"That all soldiers of the late war who served as enlisted men for two years under the provisions of the act of July 22, 1861, and afterward were discharged to receive promotion, and received commissions as officers in the Army, shall be paid the bounty which was withheld from them on account of their being so promoted and commissioned the same as they would have been entitled to receive had they completed their term of enlistment without promotion and received an honorable discharge."

Mr. CUTCHEON. This takes effect on no soldier unless he has served two full years. That makes the bill entirely nugatory. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point of order that that is an amendment to a substitute, and therefore is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. One amendment to a substitute is in order. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every volunteer non-commissioned officer, private, musician, and artificer who enlisted after April 15, 1861, for two or three years, and who was actually mustered into the United States service for two or three years, and who was subsequently honorably discharged upon surgeon's certificate for a disability incurred in line of duty or for wounds received in battle, or for promotion prior to a service of two years as an enlisted man, shall be entitled to receive the amount of bounty which he would otherwise have been entitled to receive had he completed his term of enlistment as such non-commissioned officer, private, musician, or artificer; and that all advance payments of bounty, or portion of same, which were deducted from the pay of such enlisted man by reason of having been discharged for promotion prior to a service of two years as such enlisted man, shall be repaid to such as are entitled thereto by the provisions of this act; and in case of the death of the officer or soldier entitled to the benefits of this act, the amount of money found due him shall be paid to his widow, heirs, or legal representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums due in each individual case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] offers a substitute for the first section of the bill. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] moves to amend the substitute by striking out all after the word "that" and inserting what has just been read. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 56, noes 30.

Mr. ROGERS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WARNER, and the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. ROGERS, to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 17.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair will direct that the roll be called, so that the names of members absent may be reported to the House.

The roll was called, and the following-named members failed to answer:

The committee rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having found itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and now reported to the House the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the names.

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 54, noes 28.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 15, noes 65.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were ayes 15.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only fifteen members have voted in the affirmative—not one-fifth of a quorum. Tellers are refused, the yeas and nays are refused. The ayes have it, and the motion to adjourn is agreed to.

The House accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 37 minutes a. m., May 6, 1886) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of Mrs. Stephen H. Bullard and other citizens; and of Abbie E. Kernochan and others, of Massachusetts, for enactment of Senate bill No. 54—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ARNOT: Petition of Lydia M. Kennedy for a pension; same to accompany House bill 8480—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ATKINSON: Memorial of Grange No. 787, of Pennsylvania, praying for the suppression of bogus dairy productions—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of the same, protesting against the free admission of foreign agricultural products—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 6, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

IMPROVEMENTS ON MESCALERO INDIAN RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of 1st instant from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a draught of a bill recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, providing for the payment of improvements made by settlers on the lands of the Mescalero Indian reservation in the Territory of New Mexico.

The subject is presented for the consideration and action of Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 5, 1886.

BARGE-OFFICE BUILDING AT NEW YORK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of that Department recommending that an appropriation of $28,343 be made for repairs and alterations of the barge-office building in New York city; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Los Angeles (Cal.) Board of Trade, praying that an increased appropriation be made for Wilmington Harbor, for the erection of a public building at Los Angeles, and for the establishment of a United States district court at that place; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of Mrs. K. Snyder and 12 other citizens of Charlotte, Mich., praying for appropriate legislation for the protection of young girls in the District of Columbia and other localities within the jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of S. F. Cummings, of Montpelier, Vt., and 21 other citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill taxing imitations and fraudulent manufactures of butter; a similar petition from R. C. Gates and a large number of others, citizens and farmers of Franklin, Vt., praying for legislation on the same subject; also the petition of Charles M. Mansfield, W. H. Foster, and a large number of other citizens of Sheldon, Vt., praying for relief in respect of the same matter; a similar petition from A. A. Marvin and sundry other citizens of Vermont on the same subject; also a petition on the same subject from Fay H. Herrick and other citizens of Vermont; and another of the same character from B. Contes Gallup and sundry other citizens of Vermont.

I move that these petitions be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of 300 citizens of Rome, N. Y., and vicinity, and a petition of 40 farmers of Mooers, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill taxing all imitations of butter 10 cents a pound; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CALL presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Fernandina, Fla., favoring an extension of the time for the completion of the road of the Florida Railway and Navigation Company; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of 50 citizens of Monticello, Fla., a petition of 124 citizens of Tallahassee, Fla., a petition of 43 citizens of Lawtey, Fla., a petition of 25 citizens of Bronson, Fla., a petition of 35 citizens of Gadsden County, Florida, and a petition of 31 citizens of Alachua County, Florida, praying for an extension of the time for the completion of the Florida Railway and Navigation Company; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 2362) to promote the political progress and commercial prosperity of the American nations; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the following bills, and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1426) for the encouragement of closer commercial relationship and in the interest of and the perpetuation of peace between the United States and the Republics of Mexico and Central and South America and the Empire of Brazil;

A bill (S. 1515) to authorize the President of the United States to send delegates to an international American congress to arrange for the arbitration of all national differences; and

A bill (S. 1616) to promote the political progress and commercial prosperity of the American nations.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2088) for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the British bark Chance, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. 544) granting leave of absence to employés in the Government Printing Office, reported it with amendments.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del., reported it without amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1280) to authorize Frank W. Hunt to erect and maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at the military reservation of Fort Buford, Dakota Territory, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4968) to authorize and direct the registry and enrollment of the barge Michigan, of Alpena, Mich., reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1207) granting a pension to Caroline Sees, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7168) for the relief of Mrs. Sallie Ancrum;
A bill (H. R. 7468) granting a pension to Lemuel Adams;
A bill (H. R. 3826) for the relief of John Taylor;

A bill (H. R. 448) granting a pension to Newton Day;
A bill (H. R. 1841) granting a pension to George W. Stout;
A bill (H. R. 5997) granting a pension to Elizabeth Luce;
A bill (H. R. 5329) granting a pension to William Antes;
A bill (H. R. 4229) granting a pension to Charlotte Algies, widow of Samuel Algies; and
A bill (H. R. 3198) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Hastings.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 392) declaring forfeited certain grants of land made to certain States in aid of the construction of railroads, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2803) granting a pension to John H. Snyder;
A bill (H. R. 1100) granting a pension to Jane W. Devereux;
A bill (H. R. 6389) granting a pension to Francis M. Moore;
A bill (H. R. 4539) granting a pension to Ann Little;
A bill (H. R. 1651) for the relief of Rosina Heineman;
A bill (H. R. 1889) granting a pension to Isaac Carleton; and
A bill (S. 2217) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 849) to authorize the Rio Grande, Mexico and Pacific Railroad Company to purchase 10 acres of land on the Fort Cummings military reservation in Mexico, to report it back adversely. The report is unanimously adverse, and I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] on the 27th of April last, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to; as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ an assistant clerk for the residue of this present session of the Senate only, at a salary of $8 per day, and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay the said salary out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn.; and

A bill (H. R. 5951) granting a pension to John M. Mattingly.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2363) granting an increase of pension to Marcel Gagnon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2364) granting a pension to Betsy Gardner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, introduced a bill (S. 2365) for the relief of L. M. Pearlman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 2366) granting a pension to Elizabeth Garaghty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2367) regulating writs of error and appeal from the supreme court of the District of Columbia to the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2368) to amend the act entitled "An act to prevent the sale of policy or lottery tickets in the District of Columbia," approved April 29, 1878, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2369) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Price; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2370) granting a pension to Mrs. Alice J. Shoup; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 2371) granting a pension to Samuel T. Ulm, of Union, Oreg.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 2372) for the relief of Mary McMahon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2373) to settle titles within railroad grants; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a statement which I find on page 4194 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which states that the joint commission have made a report respecting the condition of the Geological Survey, which purports to accompany a bill restricting the work and publications of that survey. I wish to say that the statement is an error. The commission have made no such report, and have not authorized the making of any such report; and any report that has been made on the subject anywhere is the individual judgment of single members of the commission, and not the judgment of the commission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If any has been made at all.

Mr. ALLISON. If any has been made anywhere.

Mr. MORGAN. I have observed the same matter in the RECORD to which the Senator from Iowa has called attention. The commission authorized the reporting of a bill, the same, I have no doubt, which has been reported to the other House. Two members of the commission, Mr. HERBERT, of Alabama, and myself, united in the statement of our reasons for supporting that bill, which the other members of the commission did not agree to; and I have no doubt that that gentleman, who is very careful, has been put in perhaps an improper attitude toward this matter by some mistake either of the reporters or the printers. Surely he never intended to make a representation that the entire commission had joined in any written report in support of the propositions contained in that bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not intend to impute any improper motive to any person connected with the commission, or to any one indeed, but only to make a statement that no report has been authorized by a majority of the commission or by the commission itself, except the report of the bill.

BILLS RELATIVE TO CHINESE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call up the resolution which I submitted yesterday and which went over under objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Ohio.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Ordered, That Senate bill 1991, entitled a bill supplementary to and amendatory of "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved May 6, 1882, &c., reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and Senate bill 2225, to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by violence of a mob at Rock Springs, &c., be, and hereby are, made special orders for Monday the 10th day of May, at 2 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to make an inquiry as to the effect of this order if it be adopted. I have supposed it was understood that certain specified subjects were to be taken up in regular order, one of which is the pension bill which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] has in charge. That bill is not a special order, and some of the other matters which I supposed were arranged for are not special orders. I wish to inquire, if the bills referred to in the resolution be made a special order for the 10th of May and the other matters which it has been understood by general consent were to be taken up in a certain order should not be all finished, whether this order would displace them? I have no objection to the adoption of the pending order if we can have the understanding which was arrived at in regard to other measures carried out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand, as I suppose all do, that this does not displace or change in the least the order of business agreed upon all around in the Senate; but this comes in afterward. If the Senator from Connecticut has any doubt about it I am perfectly willing that the date should be put off a week or two. All I want is to have the bills named made a special order.

Mr. PLATT. With the understanding as it has been stated now by the Senator from Ohio, I make no objection whatever.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say that the Committee on Foreign Relations unanimously agreed that these two bills, both relating to the subject of Chinese immigration, ought to be considered as promptly as possible. Probably they will not both together take, they ought not to take, over an hour or two, because they involve no new principle; but we thought it important that they should be expedited as far as possible.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator from Ohio, the presiding officer of the Senate, takes his seat I should like to call attention to what I understand to be the general consent of the Senate; and that is, that after the disposition of the interstate-commerce bill the general-pension bill shall be taken up.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, the list is on the desk and will be conformed to.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to call up my motion after this is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Pacific Railroad funding bill be made a special order for Tuesday, May 11, subject to the same understanding as that just had. I will state that this measure was made a special order by agreement on both sides of the Senate at the last Congress and failed to be reached by one day. It was ready to be taken up when we adjourned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the bill referred to by him may be made the special order after the order just agreed to. If there be no objection that order will be made.

OREGON RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. I wished to make a motion immediately after the conclusion of the morning business; and I suppose it is concluded now.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not desire to yield for the consideration of any subject that will take time.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senate will indulge me to take up for consideration Order of Business 516, being Senate bill 1894.

On the 31st of January last year Congress passed an act forfeiting the Oregon Central Railroad land grant and providing for the protection of the rights of settlers——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement in advance as to what the bill is. I shall not consume more than a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. DOLPH. I say the act provided for the protection of the rights of settlers, by providing that they might purchase the forfeited lands within a year from the date of the passage of the act; but it was the 16th of July before a map with instructions was sent to the office of the register or receiver in the land office at Vancouver. No notice was given of the forfeiture of the grant, or the restoration of the forfeited lands to the public domain. The usual notice was omitted by an oversight of the Department, or of the officers of the local land office, as appears by a letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to one of such settlers, which I hold in my hand. I introduced a bill at the present session to extend the time one year for settlers to perfect their titles, and it was unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands. It creates no new rights. It merely extends the time for persons who are in possession of lands to comply with the conditions of the act of January 31, 1885.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The same class of persons?

Mr. DOLPH. The same class of persons. I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of the bill and that it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 516, being the bill (S. 1894) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon," approved January 31, 1885.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information. It is not subject to objection, the Calendar being in order.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of section 2 of an act entitled "An act to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon," permitting settlers upon railroad lands forfeited by said act, not entitled to enter or acquire such land under the homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States, within one year after the passage of that act to purchase not to exceed 160 acres of the same, at the price of $1.25 cents per acre, be, and the same are hereby, re-enacted and continued in force until January 1, 1887: Provided, That the term "settler," as used in said section, shall be construed so as to include a private corporation which at the time of the passage of said act had made valuable improvements upon and was occupying a portion of said lands.

Mr. DOLPH. The proviso is stricken out by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 13, after the date "1887," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the term "settler," as used in said section, shall be construed so as to include a private corporation which at the time of the passage of said act had made valuable improvements upon and was occupying a portion of said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to consider the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend by substituting therefor Senate bill 121, known as the Staten Island Sound or the Arthur Kill bridge bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to amend is not in order.

Mr. FRYE. I took the opportunity to give notice of what I desire, and I ask unanimous consent to say that the understanding to which reference has been made was that what is ordinarily called the morning hour shall not be interfered with by bills which are assigned rights after the morning hour; and I think the Senator from Illinois is asking too much.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate by unanimous consent ordered the interstate-commerce bill to be taken up at the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. FRYE. For yesterday morning only.

Mr. CULLOM. No, until it is finished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks inform the Chair that the bill is to be so taken up from day to day until disposed of. The Chair does not remember distinctly the terms of the order; but that was done by unanimous consent, and as a matter of course the bill must be proceeded with.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate by unanimous consent without a motion.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to offer an amendment to section 4.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator yield to allow me to offer an amendment to the section, which will not interfere with the amendment he intends to propose?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. In view of the amendment adopted by the Senate yesterday, I will take the liberty of moving to strike out, in section 4, lines 12 and 13, after the word "rules," the words "covering exceptions to any such common carrier, in cases where there is competition by river, sea, canal, or lake." I do not think they are necessary, and I think the section will be improved by striking out the words.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 12, after the word "rules," strike out down to and including the word "lake," in line 13, as follows:

Covering exceptions to any such common carrier, in cases where there is competition by river, sea, canal, or lake.

So as to read:

And the commission may from time to time make general rules excepting such designated common carrier in such special cases from the operation of this section of this act.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that simplifies the section and preserves in it all the power which the commission had before in making exceptions where it may be necessary to make them. It enlarges their power to some extent and makes it more definite.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the amendment read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. That simplifies the section and at the same time preserves all the power the commission had before.

Mr. HARRIS. It gives a broader discretion to the commission than it had before.

Mr. CULLOM. It gives a broader discretion than it had before.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I have not participated in this debate because I have been opposed to the bill and to most of the amendments. I simply desire to say, as I shall have to leave the Senate Chamber pretty soon, that I shall vote against the bill for four reasons:

First. Because Congress can not interfere with the freight traffic on local roads operated wholly within State lines, and therefore the bill does not and can not cure the evils complained of, and must be partial and discriminating in dealing with the subject;

Second. Because I prefer to leave the solution of the question to the laws of trade and competition and to the States;

Third. Because I am convinced that any legislation on the subject by Congress will prove ineffectual and abortive to correct the grievances committed by railroad corporations; and Fourth. Because the assumption by Congress of jurisdiction and control of this vast and complicated problem will aggravate the evils and result in undermining the Government by corruption and favoritism.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois how this is affected by the amendment adopted yesterday.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that it is affected at all by it. It enlarges the power of the commission to make exceptions a little, and makes the section more simple and clear in its meaning than it was before.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I understood the Senator to say that he offered the amendment because of the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia yesterday.

Mr. CULLOM. Probably that expression was not necessary to be made, for really it does not depend upon the fact that that amendment was adopted yesterday.

Mr. CAMDEN. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he means to strike out the words in line 15:

And when such exceptions shall have been made and published they shall have like force and effect as though the same had been specified in this section.

Mr. CULLOM. Not at all.

Mr. CAMDEN. That was the way I understood it. The Chief Clerk did not read that portion of the section.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire before I get through to move an amendment at the end of line 16.

Mr. INGALLS. To what effect?

Mr. CULLOM. To make the language a little more clear.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that it seems to me there may be a doubt as to this amendment, and in regard to the powers conferred in the section as to how far Congress may confer the authority upon commissioners to legislate, to make laws to establish rates over railroads. It seems to me that there is a doubt in regard to that, and that the section gives the commission power which, if it exists at all, can alone be exercised by Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] a few days ago indicated that there might be a question whether when the commission made a rule making exceptions the rule did not become in effect a law, and whether they could change it. So as to avoid any question upon that point, I move to insert after the word "shall," in line 16, of section 4, the words "until changed by the commission;" so that there can be no doubt about the power of the commission after they have made a rule at one time to change it by making another, as they may see proper, in the interest of commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 16, after the word "shall," insert "until changed by the commission;" so as to read:

And when such exceptions shall have been made and published they shall, until changed by the commission, have like force and effect as though the same had been specified in this section.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by adding to the proposed insertion the words "or by law."

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that. Of course we can change it by law if we choose. I do not think there is any necessity to have those words inserted.

Mr. CONGER. I want to save from the commission a little right to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think those words ought to be inserted, because it is an absurdity to say that Congress can not change it by law if Congress wishes to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I offer an amendment to the fourth section, which I think will be acceptable to the chairman of the committee. After the word "or," in line 3, I move to insert the words "of the like class and quantity of;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of the like class and quantity of property, subject to the provisions of this act, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction.

Mr. ALLISON and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the fourth section should be amended in another particular. As it now stands common carriers are prohibited from charging a greater compensation for a shorter than for a longer distance. On this clearly arises the implication that they may charge as much; that is to say, the implication which arises upon the section as it now stands would justify a common carrier in charging as much for 100 miles as for 1,000 miles. In order to avoid the possibility of any such construction of the section I move to amend by inserting after the word "direction," in line 5, the words:

But this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance.

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear that amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 5, after the word "direction," it is moved to insert:

But this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance.

Mr. BECK. I observe that the Senator from Iowa opposed the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia, which was carried against his vote and protest yesterday. Now he seems to be seeking to out-Herod Herod, going a great deal further than anybody ever supposed. I should be glad to hear why he desires this amendment inserted, if he will be kind enough to tell us.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. When the bill was under discussion several days ago I gave notice that if the amendment which was adopted yesterday should not be agreed to I would move to amend the section by inserting, after the word "departure," in line 6, as the section then stood, the words "or to the same point of destination." So I would have enlarged the effect of the section, as reported by the committee, in the direction that the Senator from West Virginia seemed to desire to go by the amendment which he moved. But that amendment was adopted, and the words "and from the same original point of departure" were stricken out. I desired to retain them in order that I might move the amendment I have suggested, and thereby apply the rule to all carriers upon the same line, whether from the same point of departure or going to the same point of destination. The Senate, however, struck out the words in accordance with the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Now, I desire to perfect the section as it remains by declaring in terms that it shall not be held to imply authority to common carriers to charge as much for the shorter as for the greater distance; that is, that no carrier shall say that he has by implication authority under this section of the bill, should it become a law, to charge as great a sum for conveying a given amount of freight 100 miles as may be charged for carrying it 1,000 miles.

I understood the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] when the matter was under discussion several days ago to very much desire that that amendment should be placed in the bill in order to negative the possibility of such an implication arising under it.

Mr. HARRIS. The short-haul law was a question which engaged the attention of the committee for some months. A majority of the committee was not willing to go quite so far in that direction as I desired to go myself, but the extent to which I was willing to go has been reached by the adoption of the amendment which was agreed to yesterday.

When we have provided by law that the common carriers shall not charge more for the short haul than for the long haul, I am satisfied from the investigation I have been able to give the question that we have gone quite as far as we may safely go from the standpoint of the information that we have up to this time.

I think the section as it stands is quite safe, and quite as far as we ought to go in that direction at this time by legislation, giving to the commission the discretionary power that the section lodges in the commission as it stands. I hope the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa will not be adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I remember very well a discussion of this subject before one of the committees of one of the Houses of Congress several years ago when this proposition was under consideration, and it was definitely stated by those appearing in the interests of some of the carrier companies of this country that if the proposition as stated in this bill and contained in the one then under consideration before the committee should be adopted, it would be their construction of it that they would thereby be authorized to charge as much for any short distance as they would charge for a greater distance, and that they might impose as heavy a rate on a haul of 100 miles or 10 miles as they could upon a haul of 1,000 miles or more. The statement was definitely made that that would be their construction. Now, I ask that that may be met by the amendment I have offered in order that such an implication may be definitely negatived.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, when the bill reported by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] in the Forty-eighth Congress was before the Senate I opposed that bill for the reason which I thought satisfactory, that there was nothing whatever effective in that measure; because the evidence gathered by the commission under that bill could not be used in the courts or anywhere else; because there was no conclusion, nothing definite; because there was no settlement, and could be no settlement, and practically all the testimony would simply be a guide to the district attorney in preparing the necessary papers to prosecute an indictment under the law. But this bill is entirely different. This is a very great advance, in my judgment, upon the bill of the Forty-eighth Congress. This bill does make the testimony taken by the commissioners prima facie evidence in proceedings in court, and to that extent it does start in motion something which will result in a judgment one way or the other.

The whole country is now expecting Congress to do something to relieve the great trouble and friction between the railroads on the one hand and the freighters on the other. The bill may not be perfect. I do not believe that any bill which could be formulated by this body or any other body on earth could in the outset be a perfect bill, for it is the most complicated and difficult question in all the range of political economy. Yet it starts out in the right direction; it has a good object in view, and time and experience will show whatever defects there may be in it.

As I said, the examinations made by the committee, who have so ably discharged their duty, have been of immense advantage in presenting a bill at this Congress as compared with the bill at the last Congress. The general framework of this bill, it occurs to me, is right, and the amendment presented by the Senator from West Virginia and which was adopted is to my mind clearly right. I never have been able, while I can understand these arguments, to see sufficient reasons why less should be charged for a long haul than a short haul. To a plain, practical, common-sense man unacquainted with railroad business that is an unreasonable proposition. I never have been able to understand it; and the proposition presented by the Senator from West Virginia met my approbation.

Now if, as has been stated, long hauls are often at a loss, as between New York and Chicago for example, because there are various competing lines between those great points, whatever loss there may be between those points is necessarily made up on those intermediate shipping points between the terminal points, New York and Chicago; and that is a principle I am against. I have never been able to see any reason why those who live between the terminal points should pay to make good this loss because the carrier charges less from one terminal point to another than from one intermediate point to another, or the reason that when he gets to the terminal point he competes with others, and he charges more between the intermediate points where there is no competition. That does not seem to me fair; and hence the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia met my approbation.

I know very little about the questions of detail as to freight and traffic charges on railroads; but if this does not operate well we shall find it out hereafter. It is equitable so far as I am able to see, and the bill generally strikes me as a fair bill, especially as amended.

We know the fact that elsewhere they are discussing a bill having the same general object in view as this; and whatever light may be thrown on the subject by this bill and the debate that has occurred upon it will be made use of in formulating elsewhere a bill, and out of both we may get a measure which will probably be beneficial. Altogether, in my judgment, our committee has done well, and evidently done the best it could and has acted faithfully. I shall vote for the bill as it stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. CALL. The fourth section of this bill as it stands authorizes a railroad for any distance within 500 miles of New York to charge as much as it does from Chicago to New York. It authorizes it at any intermediate point, for any distance whatever, to charge the entire rate, whether it be 1 mile or 100 miles from the city of Chicago or the city of New York, or from any other terminal point, no matter how short the distance. The entire charge for the whole distance between the terminal points is authorized to be made.

Mr. CAMDEN. Allow me to say a word in explanation. This bill is not limited to extreme terminal points; and therefore a company can not charge more to one point in the line than to the next point. So this regulates itself by various points. The companies can not go back. In other words, when you go to a point within 10 miles of New York they can not charge more for that 10 miles than they charge for any other 10 miles, nor to the next point 20 miles, and so on.

Mr. CALL. We have struck out the words "from the same original point of departure."

Mr. CAMDEN. Which leaves it that they shall not charge more for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction.

Mr. CALL. That is an improvement; but the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa effectually declares that to be the purpose of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa shows that we are attempting to solve a problem here with whose elements we are unacquainted. The fourth section of this bill is like a crowbar thrust into the works of a watch, and I venture to say that as it now stands with the amendments that have been proposed there are not two Senators, whether they are friendly to the bill or opposed to it, who will give concurring opinions as to its effects if it shall become a law.

The amendments that have been adopted hitherto, one particularly at the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], are in such absolute hostility to the interests of the West of those whose location compels them to depend upon long hauls, that should the bill in that form become a law—which I should very much deplore—there never would be a bushel of grain from Iowa, Kansas, or Nebraska, there never would be a pound of beef or pork from those States go east of the Ohio River; and the Senator who lives in a region of country that will be benefited by that discrimination knows that will be the effect of it, and that is the reason why it was offered. The Senator from West Virginia lives upon the line of a railroad that is directly interested in the short-haul business. Those who have acted with him have voted for that interest. It is a direct attack upon the welfare of the West, upon the producing interests of this country.

Mr. CAMDEN. Does the Senator say I am interested in a railroad?

Mr. INGALLS. I say that the Senator from West Virginia lives upon the line of a railroad that is directly interested in the short haul.

Mr. CAMDEN. To what road do you allude, the Baltimore and Ohio?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir; and its tributaries.

Mr. CAMDEN. I live on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. I am not interested in any trunk-line road of this country.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is a line of road in this country——

Mr. CAMDEN. I want to say further that I never have had a particle of interest in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is a line of road in this country that is directly interested in the amendment that the Senator from West Virginia promoted, it is the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

Mr. CAMDEN. I understand the Baltimore and Ohio's interests, if there is any railroad whose interests are opposed to this, would be so opposed. I understand the Pennsylvania road is not so opposed, and that the New York Central road is not. If there is any trunk-line road in this country that is opposed to this amendment, it is the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; but I have no knowledge of what the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad desires or how it feels on this subject.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from West Virginia to say that the Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central Railroad are in favor of this proposition?

Mr. CAMDEN. I understand that the Pennsylvania Railroad is at this time operating under this amendment, and it is approved. I understand that the commission of the State of New York have adopted that rule in regard to the New York railroads, and they are now governed by it.

Mr. ALLISON. These railroads then that operate the Eastern lines desire this arrangement?

Mr. CAMDEN. I do not know whether they desire it or not, but I understand they are operating under this provision now.

Mr. PLATT. I know it is said that the Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central Railroad are of late observing this rule. I think there are a great many exceptions to it if they are observing it.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I speak in no spirit of hostility to the Baltimore and Ohio, the Pennsylvania, and the New York Central Railroads; but if they can obtain local rates, if they can obtain short-haul rates on the merchandise that they are bringing from the interior of this continent it will be greatly to their advantage, and the direct specific effect of this amendment that has been adopted to this section, on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia, is to compel the producers of the West, the men who raise the corn and the wheat, the beef, the pork, and the wool that are transported over these lines, to pay local rates and short-haul rates on every pound of their products that is brought to the seaboard.

The Senator from West Virginia is too astute not to know that. The Senator from West Virginia had an object and a purpose in his amendment. He is not ignorant of the effect of it, and his design was to compel those men who raise the corn and the wheat and the produce of the West to pay local rates and short-haul rates on their products, and those who voted with him and those who supported him and those who sustained him, whether they knew it or not, voted to render it practically impossible for the produce of the West to be brought to the Atlantic seaboard.

The Senator from Iowa saw this difficulty, and he proposes, by an amendment that everybody can see is impossible to be effectuated, to prevent them from charging as much even for a short haul as for a long haul, the bill having declared that more should not be charged for a short haul than for a long haul; but it is apparent from an inspection of the terms of this section that the more we amend it the deeper we get into the mire.

Sir, the people that I represent occupy the focal position on this continent; the center of the territory of the United States is within the limits of the State of Kansas; it is midway between the Atlantic and the Pacific and equidistant between Manitoba and the Gulf. We bring our commodities from the seaboard, from the east and from the west; we export our produce to the seaboard on the east and on the west. From the east come our groceries, our dry goods, our hardward, our agricultural implements, for we are not a manufacturing State; from California come fruit and tea and the products of the Orient; from Florida come the oranges and the fruits of the tropics, and all our produce that is not consumed at home is sent to the seaboard in some direction to a market. And, sir, under this section as amended by the Senator from West Virginia, if its terms are not modified by the exception that has been inserted, the commerce of that region will be absolutely annihilated. There is scarcely a possibility for subsistence now for the farmer who raises wheat upon the uplands of Kansas. So great is the cost of transportation, even under present favorable conditions, that there are scarcely wages to the man who grows grain in the valleys of the Arkansas, the Solomon, and the Republican. Corn can not be exported at a profit. We are compelled to feed it to cattle and to swine, and you now propose to put an additional burden upon those pioneers and say that they shall not be permitted to obtain profitable remuneration for any of their labor. Why, Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia declared his purpose very plainly in his speech yesterday, which I have read for the first time this morning having been detained from the Senate yesterday by illness.

Mr. President, there has been a great deal said against the effect this amendment would have on the shippers of the far West. It is not my desire, it is not the desire of any Senator who advocates this amendment, to impose any restrictions or burdens upon the shippers of the far West.

He does not desire it, but he is indifferent whether that is the result of it or not.

And when you look at it it is remarkable in my mind that the advocates of the producers of the far West should in this Senate contend that because of their distance from the market they must have lower rates, in order to compete, than the nearer shippers living between the Mississippi and the seaboard.

Why should they not have lower rates? Unless they do have lower rates, of course they can not compete with the shippers living near the seaboard.

What reason is there in that? Is there any reason for changing by law the geographical conditions of this country? This bill simply does that. It changes the geography of the States in order to make the far shipper nearer the market than the near shipper, and that the far shipper shall be charged less for taking his products to the market than the near shipper. That is the English of it; that is just what it means.

And that is just what I mean. That is what railroads were intended for. They were meant to equalize the inequalities resulting from distance. What else were they builded for? Every Senator knows that if there were no railroads a bushel of wheat could not be hauled 100 miles to a market by wagon.

Mr. CAMDEN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMDEN. Is there any reason why a bushel of grain in West Virginia, Ohio, or Kentucky should be charged a greater amount for transportation to a market than a bushel of grain in Kansas?

Mr. INGALLS. A bushel of corn raised in Kansas or Kentucky or Illinois is worth, we will suppose, a dollar in New York city. It is worth a dollar to the man who raises it, less the price of getting it to market. Because one man lives a thousand miles away from market and another man lives 10 miles away from market, why should the remote producer be compelled to have the entire value of his production consumed in getting it to market?

Mr. CAMDEN. He does not.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill absolutely provides for that in effect. That is the result of it. Under the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia the result of it is that the railroad company, being unable to make terms that shall equalize the distance-rate, will be compelled to put up long hauls to local rates or short-haul rates, whereby the entire value of the product would be consumed in getting it to market. That is to the advantage of the East. Every man who lives on the eastern slope of the Alleghanies is interested in having the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia carried into effect. It gives additional value to every bushel of grain they raise; additional value to every article that they produce for consumption, and compels those who live in the West to pay additional cost for every pound of coal, for every article that is manufactured that we are obliged to ship back in payment for our products and to consume because we do not ourselves produce them.

That is the effect of it, and I believe that is the purpose of it. It certainly can make no difference to the Senator from West Virginia whether the farmer gets a dollar a bushel for his grain in New York less 10 cents a bushel for hauling or less 50 cents a bushel for hauling it. What odds does it make to him? And yet he rises here and without any reason, without any justice arising from the relations of himself or his constituents to this subject, insists that those who live in the interior of this continent shall bear vastly increased burdens upon everything they produce and everything they consume.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If I understand the amendment it has no such effect. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia is that railroad companies shall not indemnify themselves for special favors granted to people living at a distance by adding burdens to those who are nearer the seacoast. That is all it is, to prevent an injustice arising from partiality which may be shown to the constituents of the Senator from Kansas. It is not for the purpose of putting any burdens upon them, but to prevent the cost of the favors being shown to his people being superadded to the burdens under which the people of the East labor.

Mr. INGALLS. I suppose the Senator from West Virginia knows better what he means than the Senator from Delaware does. Under ordinary circumstances I should be willing to take the glossary, the polyglot edition that is offered by the Senator from Delaware to the remarks made by the Senator from West Virginia. But what does he say himself?

What reason is there in that?

Says the Senator from West Virginia.

Is there any reason for changing by law the geographical conditions of this country? This bill simply does that. It changes the geography of the States in order to make the far shipper nearer to the market than the near shipper, and that the far shipper shall be charged less for taking his products to the market than the near shipper.

That is what the Senator from West Virginia intended to reverse. He meant by his amendment that the far shipper should pay more than the near shipper. He meant that the farmers of Illinois and Kansas and Iowa and Nebraska should pay vastly more for getting their bushel of grain to the market than the producer in West Virginia should pay. That is what he meant. What odds does it make to him or the inhabitants of West Virginia whether the farmer of Kansas pays 10 cents a bushel on his grain or 50 cents a bushel? Why is he putting his oar in this controversy? He gets all he wants to eat and all he wants to wear and his people get it without any added burdens, and yet he comes here, I will not say as the agent but as the instrument of these grasping and overreaching monopolies, to compel these vast additional burdens to be imposed upon the people of the far West, in which he has no concern whatever.

This is in the interest of corporations and against the interests of the people. It is offered because it is in the interest of corporations, because everybody can understand that if this business is left to the operation of natural laws this equalization that the Senator is opposed to will inevitably occur by competition and by the extension of this vast system of railway transportation; and that the Senator wants to forbid. No matter how many railroads are extended into that region contending for this traffic, no matter how much the means of transportation are cheapened, the Senator from West Virginia rises in his place and, speaking in the interest of those who are concerned in short hauls, says, "I propose to impose upon the people west of the Alleghanies burdens that they might escape under the operation of natural laws, under the operation of the principle of competition, under the operation of the law of equalization for which railroads were constructed, and that they shall be compelled to bear those burdens in a greater and constantly increasing ratio the greater their production becomes and the more enlarged their facilities for transportation."

Mr. President, the fourth section of this bill is an interpolation that ought never to have been permitted, and I regret that the Senator from Illinois, who, seeing the difficulties that environed the question, did not introduce it in the last bill that he submitted, saw fit to present it here. I grant that he has made it as innocuous as possible by inserting a proviso which seems to me to be inconsistent and to show the entire absurdity, the inconsistency of this whole provision by declaring this arrangement described in the first paragraph to be unlawful—which I suppose has a distinct meaning, a technical and well-defined meaning—declaring it to be something that is wrong in itself, then gravely proceeds in a proviso to say that it may be done, that this board of commissioners that is to be created for the purpose of regulating interstate commerce may permit this unlawful thing to be done:

Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property.

Mr. President, if this arrangement made by shippers and transportation companies is unlawful, then it is never right to have it done. It is either right or it is wrong. If it is right, it ought not to be declared to be unlawful. If it is unlawful, then the commission never ought to have authority to permit it to be done; and by the very fact that the Senator from Illinois has seen fit to incorporate an inconsistent and incongruous proviso here he has himself admitted the impossibility of dealing with this subject upon any proper consideration:

And the commission may from time to time make general rules covering exceptions to any such common carrier, in cases where there is competition by river, sea, canal, or lake, exempting such designated common carrier in such special cases from the operation of this section of this act; and when such exceptions shall have been made and published they shall have like force and effect as though the same had been specified in this section.

Thus, after declaring this arrangement to be unlawful, then the section provides and declares that the commissioners may permit it to be done, not only in special cases, but that they may make general rules that shall cover all cases coming within a certain class. I do not know that anything could show more absolutely than this does the futility of attempting to deal with this subject in this way; and, while I presume it will be useless to attempt at this time to strike out that section, I profess my belief that with this section in this bill every interest lying west of the Alleghany Mountains, both affecting production and consumption, is directly imperiled. There is no escape from that conclusion; and an analysis of the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia was carried shows what was the purpose and intent and idea of those who supported that amendment.

Again, Mr. President, adverting for a moment to the proviso of this section, see in what a condition this whole subject is placed supposing for an instant that this commission that is to be appointed may be in the interest of certain railroad corporations. They are at liberty at their own discretion upon application being made in special cases to modify this whole subject, and provide that this arrangement declared in the first paragraph to be unlawful may be made effectual in the interest of certain favored transportation companies.

Sir, the subject is one too great to be dealt with in this way, the interests involved are too immense to be trifled with in this way, and I, as a representative of that great interior region, productive and not manufacturing, enter my protest against it. Ineffectual I dare say it may be, but I am convinced that the briefest experience will show that it is conceived in hostility to those great interests upon which the welfare of this country depends.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. CAMDEN. I want to say a few words in reply to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HOAR. Well, Mr. President, I only want to speak three or four minutes myself.

Mr. CAMDEN. The Senator from Kansas made some remarks rather personal to me.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will yield.

Mr. CAMDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas made some reflection upon me. I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that what he has said in reference to my connection with railroads is not supported by a single fact.

Mr. INGALLS. I made no statement about the Senator being connected with railroads.

Mr. CAMDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. I appeal to the RECORD. Let the Senator appeal to the RECORD before he accuses me of saying what I did not say.

Mr. CAMDEN. The Senator said I was acting in the interest of corporations in which I was interested, as I understood him.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator will pardon me. I made no statement about the Senator's interest in corporations.

Mr. CAMDEN. Then I was mistaken.

Mr. INGALLS. And I appeal to the RECORD, which will bear me out, because it will not be subjected to any correction or change by me. My remarks will appear to-morrow morning as they were delivered.

Mr. CAMDEN. If I misunderstood the Senator I am glad of it. I simply rose to say that I have no interest in any corporation affected by this bill. I have never owned a dollar of interest in any trunk line railroad in my life. I have never owned a dollar of interest or been connected with any railroad in my life outside of the State of West Virginia, local in character, and which could not be affected by this bill in any way, except as it may be affected indirectly.

My only interest here has been for my constituents, for the people I represent, and for the great body of the people all over the country. It is not opposition to the constituents of the Senator from Kansas. I do not propose to argue what effect it may have in equalizing freights between Kansas and intermediate points; but whatever effect it does have is healthy to the commerce of the whole country.

I merely say this now by way of emphasizing the fact that I have no interest with any corporation, am not interested in any corporation, and have no knowledge of what the wishes of any corporation may be on the subject.

I will further state that I am not opposing the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, as the Senator from Kansas intimated.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand that the Senator has yielded the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from West Virginia is through.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to enter at this late hour into a general discussion of the provisions or policy of this bill. It is a bill which has been demanded by the business interests of all sections of the country, and which reflects very great credit upon the industry and the wisdom of the committee who have proposed it. I have been compelled, however, to give my attention to other studies and topics for the last few weeks, and I wish therefore to put on record in three or four sentences only the principal reasons why I can not vote for the fourth section, especially as it stands amended on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

It seems to me that the adoption of the policy of this section as amended will strike a serious and, so far as I can understand it, I believe a fatal blow at the foreign commerce of this country. We undertake to compete in supplying wheat and other food to the nations of Europe, especially to Great Britain; and the wealth and value of the lands of the West depend very largely upon our success in that competition. The English market fixes the price of every considerable product, both for this country and for Europe, of which we have any surplus to send abroad.

Now, Great Britain, our principal commercial as she is our principal manufacturing rival, has been for the last ten or fifteen years bending her energies to the attempt to drive us from the market, as was well said by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] yesterday. As our foreign commerce has increased, as the balance of trade for the first time for many generations for any considerable period has tended in our favor, England has been called upon for an expenditure the results of which are just beginning to show themselves. Some four or five years ago she had expended or guaranteed a capital of more than $500,000,000 to be expended in the single purpose of constructing railways which should bring the wheat of India to the sea; and the result appears in the fact that last year, for the last twelve months, for the first time if I am not mistaken, India has taken her place above the United States among the principal contributors of wheat to the British market.

Now, our ability to maintain competition, to maintain even a footing in that market, must depend upon the rates at which we can transfer our wheat and our food products from a center receding year by year westward from the Atlantic seaboard; and this amendment says that whenever in the heat of a fierce struggle of a foreign competition our great through transporting lines put down their prices in competition with the railway system of India or elsewhere, it is at the cost of being compelled to make a corresponding deduction on every pound of freight which they transport either way for any local purpose throughout the country.

As everybody knows, the local freight to the railroad carrier is his chief source of income, and is his chief dependence. No railroad prospers whose business is largely or chiefly a through business as compared with its local business. To the carrier, the transport of productions from the West to Great Britain is but one of a very large number of sources of income. To the farmer, the raiser of wheat or of pork or of beef, it is the one essential and vital condition upon which he can live; and therefore I can not consent to establish in the legislation of this country a principle which, if carried out, must inevitably make it cease to be the interest of the great continental transportation lines to accommodate the wheat-growers and other food-producers of the Northwest, by the reason that for every reduction in its freight occasioned by any stress of competition, by any exigency of the European market, the railroad is compelled to reduce proportionately its entire charges for freight to every customer that it has.

This is a provision to drive the American farmer from the European market. I do not mean that the Senator who introduced it has that object, but as it seems to me that is to be its inevitable result. Things have changed since the agricultural portions of the New England States were cleared of forests and savages and wild beasts. They have changed since the farmers of the Northwest went upon those new and virgin fields simply to seek homes from which they expected to do little more than to get the food and the wool which should support and clothe their own wives and children. The American farmer to-day is a great merchant, he is amerchant whose competitor is on the Bosporus and the Ganges; and he must descend in the scale of dignity among the great occupations of the earth, unless he can be permitted to keep up that competition. It was for that that I gave my vote and my voice, as other members of this body did, for the river and harbor bill two years ago in the midst of a storm of objurgation, reviling, and detraction such as has seldom been encountered by any public men in this country. And it is with the same feeling, with the same purpose, that I shall give my vote, if I have an opportunity, to strike out from the bill the fourth section.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I intended yesterday when this important question was before the Senate in another form to submit some observations which led me to the vote I cast against the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. I concur with the general suggestions made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] respecting this fourth section. I would have preferred this bill without the fourth section, leaving the settlement of the question there treated of as the settlement of other questions upon this complicated subject, to the experimentation of the commission herein provided for. But this long and short haul provision, so called, is no new suggestion or new provision. The Senator from West Virginia in moving the amendment voted on yesterday renewed a controversy which has been in existence in our country for ten years. It is the block in the pathway of any legislation upon this subject for the last ten years. There is not a Senator on this floor but knows that but for the insistence on this provision, the effect and result of which no Senator even now can tell, we should have had prior to this time a well-regulated railroad law in accordance with the laws of most of the States of this Union which regulate the State traffic.

The failure has been because a set of men engaged in this legislation have insisted that nothing should be done in the way of regulation of interstate commerce until Congress also consented that so far as concerned this question of the long and short haul, an iron rule should be incorporated in the statute enacted upon the subject.

The significance of this rule has been as well stated by the Senator from West Virginia as it is possible perhaps to state it on this floor; and while I express views in antagonism to the views which he has expressed, I do so with a perfect knowledge that in my own State this same controversy of the long and short haul is going on and has been discussed for many years. The State in which I live is threaded with railways, and there are a large number of competing points in the State, and these competing points have the advantage of the intermediate points with reference to rates in many instances. For example, as the presiding officer of this body well knows the geography of my State, at Sioux City on its western border there are five or six railroads concentrated that enable the people of that section and of that city to become the distributing point for a large region about it. So the rates at Sioux City or between Sioux City and Chicago are low rates, are rates perhaps in many instances which are barely compensating for the cost of the immediate transportation of the articles, without including the cost of the railway originally or the cost which results from the fixed charges upon the railroad.

The people at the intervening points find fault that they are charged more than is charged to the people living at Sioux City, and there is great force in that. But when you come to consider the State of Iowa by and large, I am convinced that our interest with reference to interstate commerce does not lie in the pathway of the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia. We are the largest producers in this Union of pork products, and nearly as large as any State of the Union of other meat products. We are the largest producers of corn, producing annually between three and four hundred million bushels of that cereal. We produce these things largely beyond what can be consumed in our State or in the immediate States surrounding us. Where do we find a market for these products? We find a market in the New England States where the people are not agriculturists, but where they are largely engaged in manufacturing industries. We export largely these products to foreign countries. We send our corn into the extreme Southern States where they produce cotton, &c.

Now, under the provision of this bill, in my judgment it will be practically impossible for us to transport corn from my State to the points where we now have a market for that cereal. Why? We not only have now the benefit of the long-haul rate from Chicago east, but our people are compelled to reach the Chicago market by practically the same character of rates that prevail in West Virginia and in the Eastern States of the Union. Our corn concentrates either at Chicago or Saint Louis on the principle of local hauling, and the fact is that at Chicago and at Saint Louis it has the benefit of the cheap competing rates; and but for that fact, in my judgment, we could not transport it at all.

But, as I said before, I think it is a mistake to undertake in this bill to provide any legislation with reference to the rates to be charged. Who would say that we can reasonably undertake the question of fixing minimum and maximum rates in this bill? The committee that has investigated this subject and presented to us an able report with much valuable information does not even make the suggestion; and although experiment after experiment has been tried in the States of this Union, I know of but one or two States where those provisions are part of the local law. We tried such a system in the State of Iowa, and after three or four years of experimentation it was repealed, and now we have a commission with ample authority over this whole subject.

Why this persistence with reference to the law for the short haul, as it is called, in this bill? I venture the statement, without fear of successful contradiction (and I will ask some gentleman on this committee to contradict me if I err), that all the testimony taken by this committee and every suggestion made by the committee shows conclusively that in the States where the short and long haul provision exists that provision is not observed at all. In the State of Ohio, where it has prevailed for a great many years, the testimony is conclusive that they pay no attention whatever to it.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. I think in the States where they have a short-haul law, and provide as was proposed by the committee——

Mr. ALLISON. I am not speaking of that provision. I am speaking of the provision of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. PLATT. Allow me to finish what I commenced to say. I think that the short-haul law, provided that it operates only as to freight from the same original point of departure, has been observed and is found to be a very wise and beneficent law. I can read from the report and from the testimony to that effect. But wherever that clause as to the original point of departure has not been inserted it is practically a dead letter; and the governor of West Virginia in 1885, writing to its commission, where they have an iron-bound long and short haul law, said that it was not worth the paper that it was written on.

Mr. ALLISON. That is only confirmation of the statement I made, which was that the provision inserted by the Senator from West Virginia is a nugatory provision in all the States of this Union. It is just worth the blank paper on which it is written, and no more.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. If that be so, and if it be the fact that that provision is utterly useless wherever it has been adopted, why should it provoke so much agitation? Why so excited and animated opposition and so protracted a fight over that proposition here if as the Senator says it is utterly nugatory wherever practiced?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the usual question, and I will endeavor to answer the Senator. I suppose the Senator from West Virginia does not desire to create a penal statute and then have that statute violated in every State of this Union. I do not know that he wants to make it the instrumentality whereby certain railroad corporations can force other railroad corporations into their own plans and schemes. I attribute no such purpose to him and no such purpose to any Senator who voted for this amendment, but I merely made this illustration for the purpose of showing that in the States of this Union where it has been tried it has been found ineffectual.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] yesterday came to the rescue of Pennsylvania as against the Iowa wheat-grower and the Iowa wheat farmer because of the discrimination in reference to freight rates by railways. I do not think that the citizen of Pennsylvania has any right to make this complaint. The low rate for long hauls are essential in many instances to the transfer of property from one great region to another. The State in which I live and the surrounding States are purely prairie States, practically without timber. Of the many millions of tons of anthracite coal that are taken from the mines in the State of Pennsylvania a great portion is distributed at points west of Chicago. Over three-quarters of the territory of the State in which I live, in the severe climate during the winter, I think it is safe to say that one-half of the people in the towns and villages during the winter burn anthracite coal. But under the provisions of this bill as it now is it will be utterly impossible for them to secure anthracite coal for their winter's fires. These millions of tons of coal go to Chicago and Duluth, away around the State of Michigan; and from the city of Duluth, where the coal lands, in the State of Minnesota, that coal is distributed into the heart of Iowa by means of the railroad system from Saint Paul; but if this iron-bound and iron-clad provision is inserted it does not require the wayfaring man to see that transportation of anthracite coal from the coal fields of Pennsylvania into the interior of the prairie States is a practical impossibility at a price that we can afford to pay for it.

I have been told that from the interior of New York—I do not remember the place, either Syracuse or Lyons; some point where a railroad reaches the New York Central—coal is transported to Chicago by rail in competition with lake and canal at the rate of $12 per car-load of 16-ton cars, a distance of more than 700 miles. Why do they do that? It is because these long lines of trains carrying the products of the West from Chicago to the East, to New York and to Boston, are running back with empty cars upon this line of railway, and they can load this coal upon them, and thus transport the coal at the mere cost of the carriage of the coal itself. These railroad companies undoubtedly distribute coal all along their lines all through the States of Ohio and Indiana and Michigan; but does anybody believe that with this iron-clad provision inserted here they could afford to haul this coal at all if by it they are compelled to charge no higher rate at any of the intermediate points than they charge because their cars are compelled to go through to Chicago?

It is because I see these difficulties surrounding this transportation question, as developed in the fourth section of the bill, that I have desired that we should try the proposed commission at least for one year or two years before we enter upon this experiment by means of legislation. But I am willing and I want to support the fourth section with the provision inserted by the committee who have examined this question so carefully. Why? Because they surrounded it with such limitations and exceptions as that in the nature of things we should have experience upon this subject by which we could modify or change the provisions, if necessary, at the next session or two years from now. But the Senator from West Virginia has incorporated a principle here and made it iron-clad in such a way as I fear will in the next two or three years, or the next year even, embarrass very much the commerce of this country.

Why, Mr. President, there is no more sensitive thing in our country than its commerce. There are so many ramifications and so many conditions and elements which enter into it that it is practically impossible to make any fixed rules respecting it.

I listened with pleasure to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] with reference to the question involved here as to our relations with foreign countries. I agree with every word he said with respect to it. But that does not only apply to our trade as in competition with India, but let me remind my friend from Massachusetts that Dakota is to-day the principal wheat-growing region in our country. It is a region that can practically grow wheat only, itself in competition with a very large area of country lying immediately north of it that has the same character of soil and the same character of product. The Dominion of Canada is developing her railway system north of that, and she is developing it so as to reach Lake Superior and to reach all the lines of communication connecting thence with foreign countries. Now, we have tied the hands of these hardy producers of wheat in Dakota by saying to them, "You shall not transport your wheat to market unless you can afford to sell it at such a price as will enable a few of the wheat-growers in West Virginia to secure the same facilities with reference to transportation that you secure." In the State of West Virginia it is not a question of whether the product shall exist or not. In my State with reference to corn, as I have already observed, and in Dakota in reference to wheat, the whole question of production depends on the question of the cost of the transportation.

Not only that, but how is this provision to be applied? The fourth section has already been modified by striking out the provision inserted with reference to lake, canal, or river. I understood the Senator from Illinois this morning to move to strike out the limitation with reference to lake or river, although I did not understand fully when I asked the question this morning. I am glad the Senator proposed that amendment, because under it I think the commission would have been led into interminable difficulty. There is hardly a place in the United States that is not affected by competition with lake, canal, ocean, or river.

The price at which wheat or any product of the farm or the shop can be carried from Chicago to New York not only affects the prices of the New York Central Railway and its connecting systems, but it also affects the price of the Pennsylvania system, of the Baltimore and Ohio system, and even of the Chesapeake and Ohio system, and the Erie as well. But the Mississippi River itself exerts a commanding influence upon the price from Chicago by the great lakes. So when you reach around in the Gulf portion of our country, Atlanta—I do not know precisely, but the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] can tell me—Atlanta is affected more or less by the competition that comes from the ocean by way of Savannah.

Mr. BROWN. Very largely.

Mr. ALLISON. Very largely so, although it is far in the interior, and so, probably, of every principal point in Georgia. Therefore when you have stricken out this provision you simply have left this bill where it ought to be left if the fourth section is to stand; namely, this commission should have ample and complete power to nullify it, and that, as I understand, is the position of the section to-day. If it shall appear upon a case made by any transportation company that this section operates unjustly or imperfectly, then it is within the power and control of the commission, if they act honestly and intelligently, to make an exception.

I repeat it is within the power of this commission to nullify the main provisions of this section. I believe that that will be found necessary in order to enable the people who to-day produce the produce of this country for export to other countries to reach the markets of the world. So believing, I voted againt the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia yesterday. I shall ask, if no one else does, that we shall take a separate vote on the amendment in the Senate, in order that we may again test the sense of the body upon this important provision.

Mr. President, having said this much upon this bill in explanation of the vote I cast yesterday, I will simply add that the general provisions of the bill meet with my approval, and I shall be glad to support them. I think the committee have taken great pains to make a just and fair bill upon this subject, and I think they deserve the thanks of the Senate for the patience with which they have conducted their labors during all these months, and I trust that we shall now in the main features of the bill adhere to their recommendations.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I shall occupy the attention of the Senate only for a few moments, and chiefly in explanation of the position of the committee.

The committee has been attacked both by its friends and its foes on account of this fourth section, and as I have said once or twice in the Senate before, it is the section of the bill about which the committee had the greatest doubts as to just what it ought to recommend to the Senate; but the committee finally recommended this section, because, on hearing the testimony of the people of the country in different sections of it, there seemed to be a pretty general belief on their part that there should be some legislation looking to the prevention, ordinarily, of charging more for a shorter than for a longer distance on the same line going in the same direction.

So the committee determined that they would report the section as it stands in the bill, and the conclusion of the committee is substantially in harmony with the action of almost every local State board in the country upon that subject. It is substantially in harmony with the action and belief of the railroad commission of New York. It is substantially in harmony with what is done in many other States of the Union where they have that question to contend with, as they have in every State in the Union where they undertake to regulate charges at all.

So when the Senator from Kansas attacks the committee and charges that it asserts one thing and then denies it in the same provision, it is true in one sense. It is true that the first part of the section legislates against the charging of more for a shorter than for a longer distance; but the testimony of witnesses all over the country shows conclusively that with that portion of the section alone left standing as the law of the land railroads could not operate unless they violated the section of the law. So the committee felt that in justice to public sentiment there should be some declaratory provision of law against charging more in all cases for a shorter than for a longer distance, and then it believed that its obligation to the country was that it should provide a means by which in cases where it was right to do otherwise the railroad companies would have the power to do it under the operation of the law as enforced by the commission.

So then, Mr. President, any assault upon the committee that it was presenting here a section which was contradictory in itself, I think is not justified. It is true that the first part of the section provides against charging more for a shorter than for a longer haul; but when the commission, as provided in the section, makes an exception to that principle, that exception becomes the rule of the law, if you please, just the same as though the thing was stated in the law itself.

I think then that any man who looks at this question dispassionately and wants to do fairly both by the people of this country and by the corporations so as to neither cripple the corporations nor to injure the business of the country, must conclude that if we have any provision on that subject at all that means anything it must be that that section as it stands in the bill is about the best thing that can be done.

I stated in the beginning of the discussion on this bill that my judgment had been that we could not safely legislate upon that subject at all, and I took that position two years ago, and, as the Senator from Iowa has stated, I reported a bill without that provision in it; and it is only in deference to the public judgment of the country as heard and known to exist by the committee that we put the section in the bill as it stands, recognizing the general proposition that there should not ordinarily be a greater charge for a short haul than for a longer haul, and giving the commission the power in cases where right and justice and protection to the commerce of the country as well as to the railroads made it necessary to render the law ineffective, that the commission should have power to do so.

As the Senator from Minnesota suggests, we did not report the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. We certainly did not. The Senate knows that a majority of the Senate who voted yesterday adopted the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated; that the rigid enforcement of the law as now amended will result substantially in making a mileage act, so that the nearer a party lives to the seaboard the cheaper will he get his transportation. It will result, in my opinion, in destroying much of the commerce of this country. I mean with that amendment in it, striking out the words inserted by the committee as to the same original point of departure.

Now, sir, let us see what there is to be effected by this amendment, if it has any effect at all. Take the cereals of this country; take the grain raised in the United States. Last year 1,936,000,000 bushels of corn were raised. The most of that corn, the greater portion of it, was raised in Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Ohio, and Nebraska. Now, I undertake to say that if there is any act passed by this Congress which at all tends to be a mileage act, so that the charge is in proportion to the distance, it will absolutely destroy any foreign market for all the production of corn raised in those States that I have named. Take the article of wheat. There were raised last year 357,000,000 bushels of wheat in round numbers, and that was largely raised in those States and in the Territory of Dakota, of which the Senator from Iowa has spoken, which is getting to be a great wheat-growing portion of this country. Then take the article of the production of hogs. There were slaughtered in the United States last year $393,000,000 worth of hogs.

Take the property in cattle. There were in 1884 50,000,000 head of cattle, and of sheep about the same number. If we pass any law which if enforced will become to any extent a mileage act we shall cut off the Eastern market, to say nothing about the exportation that the country has been engaged in for many years past.

Let us see what the exports of the country are in these particular things. Take the exports of breadstuffs for the last year. There were $160,000,000 worth of breadstuffs exported from this country; the exports of wheat were eighty-four and one-half million bushels; the exports of corn about 52,000,000 bushels; the exports of cotton 1,892,000,000 pounds. Those things under the present operation of business are exported from the United States. But the exports of the country are a very small portion of the commerce of the country. The truth is that the great body of what is eaten in the Eastern States is produced in the Western States and Territories; and if we inaugurate any system of laws by which those products of the West can not reach the Eastern market, we thereby destroy the Western farmer in the Territories and States which I have named, and at the same time we make it that much harder for the people of the East, who are the manufacturers of the country largely, to get their living.

So then, in my judgment, Mr. President, with the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia in this bill, it will have a very serious effect upon the producer of the West, upon the consumer of the East, upon the power of the United States to cope with foreign countries in the exports of the country, and will thereby injure this country, to whatever extent that may go.

Sir, I shall not take up the time of the Senate in further discussion. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia has been adopted by the Senate. I hope that before we get through with the subject we shall reconsider the action of the Senate upon that question and retain the words that were stricken out yesterday by the vote of the Senate, because I insist that with those words stricken out of the bill the effect will be to so injure the commerce of the country that we shall be more eager to repeal the law at the next session of Congress than we are to-day to pass one.

I want to say a word further, Mr. President, upon the controversy that has existed in the Senate upon the question of regulating commerce for many years past. It has come to be in the estimation of the people of this country almost a joke to talk about regulating commerce by Congress because of the fact that we have considered and considered over and over again the question and have failed so far to get any legislation at all on the subject. I hope the Senate will not put this bill in such a shape that men who are desirous of its regulation shall not be compelled to vote against it on its final passage. Why, sir, since yesterday, since those words were stricken out of the bill prominent railroad men have told me that now they had no fears of this bill becoming a law, or if it was enforced at all we would repeal it and be eager to do so, and at the very next session of Congress.

I have been unwilling from the beginning so far as I am concerned, and I can speak I think for the other members of the committee that they were not willing, to put anything into this bill that would make it obnoxious to the people so that we should be eager to repeal it hereafter. I met some gentlemen in New York during the examinations of the committee, and they wanted the bill loaded down with extreme measures so that we should have to repeal it in deference to public judgment hereafter; but I told them, as I told the Senate, that I was not to be made use of for any such purpose, that I wanted a bill that would further the interests of the people so far as we could make one and not one that would be absurd on its face and that we should be called upon to repeal at the very next session of Congress.

The committee acted upon the theory that this bill was as strong a one as we could stand upon, and in our judgment and in the judgment of the country would be sustained by actual enforcement after it became a law.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I do not suppose that the country generally is aware of the extent to which even the agricultural population of the Alleghany and Eastern States are dependent upon the agricultural productions of the West for their own sustenance. I do not believe that the agricultural population of New England produces more than one-half of what it consumes. In my own State, while I have not the figures, from general observation I think that at least three-fourths of all the wheat and at least one-half of all the corn consumed are brought from the great West. What is true of the agricultural population is of course to a greater extent true of the manufacturing population and of the manufacturing interest generally. If the manufacturing States of the East were not able to command the cheap agricultural productions of the far Northwest it would be under existing conditions entirely impossible for them to maintain their industries. If this bill should become a law, and in its practical enforcement it should have the result to destroy the competition which now exists from the great centers of the West in the transportation of agricultural productions easterly, in my belief it would add at least 25 per cent. to the ordinary expenses of the necessaries of life to the working, the manufacturing, the laboring people throughout the Atlantic slope and the Eastern States. I do not believe that I exaggerate at all.

I have alluded to the extent to which even the agricultural population is dependent upon the great commodities of the West for its own maintenance, the maintenance of its own industry. The cattle that are fatted, the hogs that are fatted, and the meat production of the East are dependent very largely upon the agricultural productions of the West for their support. It is not that we eat the meat killed in the West alone, but that we use the corn and other productions of the West to fat our own pork, to fat our own cattle, to maintain our own working stock during the winter and in the summer season in the performance of the labor on the farms and in other ways. So a bill which tends to increase the cost of the necessaries of life to the East is one most severely and directly in the way of their prosperity.

The East is a great competing point just as the West is a great competing point, and they have the same relation to each other that New York and Chicago have to each other, or that London and the great Northwest have to each other, and we can speak of these great sections as competing points, and any law which tends to destroy this natural and healthy competition must strike directly at the industries of the Mississippi Valley and the Atlantic slope alike.

This fourth section of the bill as it came from the committee seemed to me quite objectionable. I think the law will be better, if the bill is to become a law, without the fourth section. Still, I would have been willing to have supported the bill as it came from the committee. With my present views of the merits of the measure and its inevitable effect on the prosperity of the country, especially of my own section, I do not see how I can vote for this measure as it now stands.

It is certainly desirable that there be something in the way of a commission, that there be some tribunal that can at all events carry the force of strong and intelligent and impartial opinion in the direction of the removal of discriminations and abuses that have grown up in the business of transportation. That is not only desirable but it seems to me something that is almost indispensable. But when we undertake to go further and to provide in a law for that which will build up the Central States, as they seem to imagine, in their industries by striking down the valley of the Mississippi and the Northwest and the great manufacturing interests that belong to some extent with the agriculture of the East, we are entirely outside of the proper legislation which should originate and be enacted in this bill. It is better to do nothing at all.

It has been suggested that perhaps there may be some reconsideration of the vote of yesterday by which the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia may be removed from the bill, that the bill may be left as it was originally. If that can be done, while I am not so sure of the most glorious results from the passage of the measure, still I would support it; I would be glad to support it. I think it is a tribute to public sentiment that we should pay in the direction of experiment as to what may in the end be wise legislation, such regulations as in the end will relieve the evils of which we complain.

But this is a delicate matter; the business of the country is already sufficiently disturbed, and a measure of this kind which is to add, as I profoundly believe, at least 25 per cent. to the cost of the necessaries of life for the laboring people and the manufacturing laborers of this country, is not easily to be enacted into a law. If it should ever be done, let it be done later when there is more profit to labor, when all agricultural productions are paying more to those who produce them than now, and when the country is in a condition to endure disturbance which may be prolonged not only months but years as a result of this day's legislation.

This is all I care to say, Mr. President. I am anxious to support some measure, but it is better to do nothing than to do a dangerous thing.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this is certainly a very important measure, and before it is enacted into a law it ought to be subject to very careful consideration.

If it be true that there is in the provision adopted on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia anything that would interfere with the commerce of the people of Kansas, with the transportation of the productions of the West to the seaboard that they may be taken to a foreign market, it ought not to be adopted. But before we arrive at that conclusion we must arrive at it not from mere declaration of opinion but from examination of the provisions of the law.

What is it that the Senator from West Virginia has proposed? The original bill, as I stated when I first took the floor this morning, provided that upon any line of railroad there should be no greater charge for a short distance than for a longer one from the same point of departure. Now, what did that mean? That meant that on freight starting from the same place, over the same line, and in the same direction there should be no greater charge for a short haul than for a long one, but that for one mile there might be charged as much as for a thousand miles or ten thousand miles, that the limit was that it should not be greater for the mile than it was for the ten thousand miles.

Now, we have stricken out the words "from the same original point of departure." What effect has it? It simply leaves the provision that to charge more for one mile than for a thousand miles on any part of that line, without reference to where the goods start from, whether at one place or another place, leaving out "the same point of departure" and starting from different points of departure, there may be as much charged for one mile as for a thousand or ten thousand miles. This provision applies to every railroad, to every line.

How is it going to affect the products of the farmer in Kansas injuriously to say that whenever on that line of interstate commerce starting from different points of departure no greater charge shall be made for a short distance, for one mile, than for the whole distance, say from Chicago to New York? But the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia allows that amount to be imposed upon any distance of transportation. If it be a part of a mile or a whole mile, the rate for the entire route may be imposed upon it.

Now, what does the Senator from Iowa propose? He proposes that it shall not be understood by this section in this bill that companies may be allowed to charge as much for the short distance as for the long. They may charge within a fraction as much. Suppose the charge is 10 cents and they charge within 1 mill of the 10 cents; the law authorizes them to do it. It simply is that in reference to the provision of the bill which seems to be acceptable to every one, that there shall be no unreasonable charges, no unjust charges; that the standard of reason and justice in the law shall not be declared to be that they may charge as much for 10,000 miles as for 1 mile. That is the only effect of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

But the Senator from Kansas made a point, and the Senator from Iowa reiterated it, that it would be unjust to the people of the West, a discrimination against them. Let us see what is the proposition. That the local business shall bear the entire cost of transportation; that the people of the intermediate points shall pay the whole and the people at the terminal points pay nothing. That is the tendency of the argument. Everybody will admit that would be improper, that it is impossible. One community ought not to be made to bear the expense of transporting the products of another. If there be a difference requiring a smaller proportion per mile of the whole cost for a long distance than a short, still there is even on this basis a proportion which it is just should be borne equally by everything transported and by every community, whether far or near. It will not be just that the terminal points shall make use of the road at the cost of the people doing the local business and deriving no profit from the through business, but paying for having the through freights undersell their own products.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Does he not recognize the fact that the local business is everything; that these great competing points are far separated from each other, and that every community has to do its own local business? Then where is the hardship of which he complains? The people in these intermediate States all have their local business. We have it in New England, they have it in the far West. The burdens of the railroads, the local burdens, are the same everywhere, but this matter of the through transportation of which I was speaking is another matter altogether. But does the Senator think it is right, when each community takes care of its own burden, that these widely separated communities like the far West and the far East should have an additional one imposed upon them for the benefit of the intermediate States?

Mr. CALL. No.

Mr. BLAIR. Why should they?

Mr. CALL. I do not think so. The difficulty is that the Senator does not take hold of the subject. The proposition is that the short-haul rate being allowed to be as great as the long-haul rate, it may be less than the cost of transportation over the long distance, and thus make the local business pay for it and pay for having their own freight burdened with a greater cost and a higher price than the through freight. Thus the through freight will go through free, and the local freight reach market with the cost of the through freight added to it. Does the Senator think this would be right?

Mr. BLAIR. It is not proposed that it shall be as great as the long-haul rate. It is simply an india-rubber provision with reference to that left to the discretion of the parties interested or to such consequences as result from business relations, nothing more. But the question I put to the Senator is this, does he not recognize that all parts of the country are burdened with the support of their local transportation? And in the nature of things it must be higher than that which is imposed upon the great through transportation of the country.

Mr. CALL. Yes, I recognize that.

Mr. BLAIR. And is not the effect of the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia and the proposition of the Senator from Florida an effort to fasten upon the through business of the country the proper expenditure that is chargeable to the local transportation? Is it not that?

Mr. CALL. Not at all; on the contrary it is to equalize, to make people pay their just proportion, to make the farmer in Kansas pay his reasonable and proper proportion of the cost of transportation. It is not to say that the long distance shall not have a smaller rate of charge, but that it shall pay a reasonable proportion, and the intermediate points pay a reasonable proportion.

There must be some regulation as to a fair and just apportionment upon the productions of the extreme terminal points, as Kansas on the one side and Florida on the other. The evidence gathered before the Interstate Commerce Committee shows that nearly every business man testified to the necessity of such a rule. In the State of Iowa, an intelligent citizen, a machinist and representative man, Mr. Loughran, appeared and testified unequivocally in favor of the just apportionment both for the through rate and for the short haul or local rate, the through business and the local business, showing the injurious effect on intermediate points of imposing the cost of the through freights in addition to the cost of the local business on them.

That is the proposition to be considered. Does it attain this purpose and remedy this evil to say you may charge as much for a ten thousand mile haul as for one mile? Does it affect the question at all? We all recognize that in this transportation from extreme points to the sea there must be a different rate provided, but what rate—what proportion? That is a very plain proposition. As was said by the Senator from Kansas, railroads are intended to overcome distance.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator state that we in the Senate can fix the exact proportion or in any sense fix it? That is what he is undertaking to do.

Mr. CALL. I do not; but I think if the railroads can make a system of pooling that destroys competition, if they can unify the transportation of the country, the Congress of the United States ought to be able to use that instrumentality if necessary or some other to do by law what they do habitually and conclusively, for it is an established fact in this testimony that the system of pooling by the railroads themselves not only destroys competition but fixes the rates and imposes the rates upon the local business of the country; and the question is whether the proportion is a satisfactory one, whether the proportion that the railroads have imposed upon the local business is a proper proportion to be paid in respect to that paid for the through business.

That is all the question there is in it; and if we can not satisfy and solve that problem, if we must allow, according to the evidence from Pennsylvania which I read yesterday, such a rate of transportation as will drive the agricultural population from the rich lands of Pennsylvania, or anywhere else, to reach a terminal point from which the transportation is so much cheaper that they can not compete with it in agricultural products, then we can do nothing, then the question how we shall prevent that discrimination as against one place or another that will be hurtful to existing interests, whether commerce or agriculture, must be answered by saying that it is not in our power, and the report of the committee is entirely wrong, and the bill we are discussing of no practical use, and we had better lay it on the table and waste no further time in its consideration.

Competition has failed to do it. If it has not, then we do not need this law, then the testimony taken by this Interstate Commerce Committee is a failure and is untrue, every word of it. If you do need it, then arrive at it by some practical process, and that is the proper way to prevent that discrimination against the intermediate point. If you say that it is sufficient to declare that you shall not charge more for 1 mile than for 10,000 miles, then you have arrived at a practical result, but I say that it is not so. And I am in favor of doing a little more now, and declare that the bill shall not authorize them to charge as much. I recognize the merits of the bill. It is a step in the right direction. It is asserting the duty and the power of Congress to legislate against improper discrimination, to arrive at some result by which all the different portions of the country will be equally protected and no advantage given or taken.

As I said before, there is a difference between through business, a difference between long distance, between productions which are to be sent across the sea and to be distributed elsewhere, and local business; but there is a fact that you must consider, that such a system of rates as will impose the whole or an unfair proportion of the cost of transportation on the local business of the interior is unjust; and that is the great difficulty complained of. The testimony that I read yesterday from a very intelligent man upon a very careful computation and estimate of figures was that $17,000,000 were paid annually by the people of the Eastern States to keep up local business for the through transportation, and the question is how to adjust a reasonable porportion to rest upon the through business of the country and how much on the local business. I am aware of the difficulties of the subject, but the country demands legislation by Congress, and it is an imperative necessity. I have no doubt that the legislation proposed in this bill may be matured so as to remedy the evils complained of, to the advantage of both producers and carriers and consumers.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the difficulties in this question have been well stated by a number of Senators. The task the committee had to perform was a herculean one. It was impossible for them to produce a bill that was perfect. They have probably done the best that any committee could have done under the circumstances, and with slight modifiations it was my expectation to vote for the bill; but with the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia as part of the bill, I can not do so, because I am entirely satisfied that in its practical workings it would greatly embarrass the commerce of this country and the people of this country.

It is said by my friend from Florida, who has just taken his seat that all that the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] does is to provide that freights shall not be hauled a longer distance for less money, and he puts an extreme case that the road may charge as much for hauling 1 mile as for hauling 10,000 miles under that provision of the bill if it shall become a law. If so, let me ask what good does the Camden amendment do toward regulating railroad traffic and railroad charges, and how does it help the case? What broader latitude of discrimination would any road want than the same sum paid for hauling 10,000 miles that it gets for hauling 1 mile?

But I do not understand that to be the meaning of the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia at all. It provides in substance that there shall not be a less charge for a greater distance than for a short distance. Take the points of Chicago and New York as an illustration, and say that it is 1,000 miles from one city to the other. We will fix the rate, say at 50 cents a hundred pounds between New York and Chicago. Under the provisions of the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia we shall not charge less, as they say, for the full thousand miles than the charge for the first 100 miles. The freight being fixed at 50 cents per hundred pounds per hundred miles, if the bill should be carried out as they understand it, the railroad would charge 50 cents for the first hundred miles, then it might carry it on to New York from Chicago for 50 cents for the thousand miles. What is that? It is 5 cents for each hundred pounds per hundred miles. When the two trains have started out, one carrying the local freight 100 miles, for which it charges 50 cents, and the other, the through freight, running 200 miles with its burden, what has it done? It has earned 10 cents; 5 cents for each 100 miles, which is part of the 50 cents for the thousand. It charges, therefore, but 10 cents for carrying that freight the first 200 miles. Has it not violated this law? It is true it has not run through the whole distance; but whenever it has run 101 miles or 200 miles and the charge is really made for that distance, has been assessed and has been paid, you have hauled a longer distance for less money, and you have violated the law.

Therefore there is no difficulty about the proposition laid down by the Western Senators who have spoken this morning. If the bill becomes a law with the Camden amendment contained in it, it is simply an impossibility for the people of Iowa, Illinois, or any State west or northwest of those States to ship their grain to New York or to Georgia, to the Southern States or to the Eastern States, or to any other point where it has more than five or six hundred miles to go. There is no getting away from it. The bill passed in that shape simply forbids foreign commerce to be conducted at all where the products are grown at any considerable distance in the interior, and it forbids commerce between different sections of our own country where they are five or six hundred miles apart.

I can not vote for such a measure. Such a measure carried out would be ruinous not only to the railroad interest but to the interest of the people and the producers, and more especially the latter. Possibly the railroad interests could take care of themselves to a much greater extent than the people could.

Take the instance that was put yesterday morning by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], when the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] interrogated him on the matter. He asked the Senator from West Virginia——

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWN. Allow me to get through with this point. The Senator from Wisconsin asked the Senator from West Virginia what proportion of the freight of the Pennsylvania Railroad was through freight, and the Senator from West Virginia replied one-tenth. What will be the working under this bill? Nine-tenths of their business is local. They must fix their through rates so that they will not charge less for a long haul than for a short haul. This bill enacted into a law would of course put them to thinking how they will conduct their business. Nine-tenths of it being local and one-tenth of it being through business they would simply make a reasonable advance upon their through business, and the advance would be high enough in all probability to cut off that through business, but the same advance would be made also upon the local business. The through business, one-tenth, they would raise in the same proportion that they raised the nine-tenths of local business. What would be the result? They would make nine times as much as they would lose by discontinuing the through business and raising the rate on local business. How would that help the State of West Virginia? It could not help it.

You may by enacting this law destroy their through transportation. The railroad company could not live a day on its business and carry that freight, because if it is to carry its local business as low as the through business it can not live and meet its obligations, and it must do that; it will raise both, and that will cut off the through business and turn it to the water, and they will make more money out of the local business than they make out of both now.

Therefore in every way you turn it over there is difficulty in this question. Senators here do not understand, probably not one of us fully understands it. There is no rule we can lay down, no chain of reasoning we can adopt that will run through the whole case. We shall soon find exceptions, we shall soon find embarrassments every way we turn it over. It is an extremely difficult question to deal with and we are likely to do great harm by injudicious action, well meant by every Senator. I do not impugn the motives of anybody. I have no doubt each and every Senator here is striving to do the very best he can to advance the interests of the whole country, but we are treading upon very uncertain ground. It is very doubtful whether we can get along at all with such legislation as we are likely to accomplish here.

Now I will hear the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia as to the rates from Chicago to Atlanta, how it is going to injure the commerce either of Chicago or Atlanta to say that for a shorter distance 60 cents a hundred tons shall be paid.

Mr. BROWN. I do not understand that to be the meaning of the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CALL. I do.

Mr. BROWN. There we differ and differ honestly.

Mr. CALL. The language of the bill is:

> That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property subject to the provisions of this act for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator be right——

Mr. CALL. He can not charge any more. He can charge as much for the distance from Chicago to Atlanta as from Chicago to any point. Therefore on that road you may charge for every pound of freight on every mile of that road under this amendment the same amount that you charge for the whole distance, but no more.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator's construction be right, then what possible good does the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia do to any living person? How does it prevent extortion or how does it prevent discrimination. In other words, what it legalizes here would not be extortion or unjust discrimination. What good could it do to the people of Georgia or Florida, or of any other State, to enact a law and say that the shipper at Chicago may charge as much for the first 60 miles as he charges to Jacksonville, Fla.? How does that regulate commerce? How does that regulate rates? How does it do anybody any good? It leaves it in a great deal worse condition than it is now if the railroads do all they would then have a legal right to do.

Mr. CAMDEN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? The provision is that they can not charge more from West Virginia to Baltimore than they charge from Chicago to Baltimore.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to ask the Senator from West Virginia a question?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir, a question.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask whether any railroad company does charge or ever has charged the same rate for carrying goods from West Virginia to Baltimore as from Chicago to Baltimore?

Mr. CAMDEN. They sometimes charge more from West Virginia to Baltimore than they charge from Chicago to Baltimore.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have the rates of freight from Chicago to Eastern ports for a series of years, including the rates from West Virginia points to New York, and they disprove entirely the statement which the Senator from West Virginia has made a number of times in the course of this discussion.

Mr. CAMDEN. I will say to the Senator then his reports are wrong, for I know the fact I have stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. These are the official reports of Mr. Fink, the commissioner of the trunk lines, published to the world from time to time, from 1876 down to the present time.

Mr. CAMDEN. I want to ask the Senator a question right there. Does Mr. Fink say that the rates from Chigago to Baltimore are not more than the rates from West Virginia to Baltimore on cattle?

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course, the Senator will understand that I mean the same kind of freight from both points.

Mr. CAMDEN. I mean that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have not the figures for cattle, but I have in my hand the figures for wheat for a series of ten years from both points, and I find that when the rate was 18 cents from Chicago to New York the rate from Wheeling to New York was 11 cents.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am not speaking of Wheeling, I want the Senator to understand. Wheeling is a competitive point. But 50 miles from Wheeling, from Parkersburg or Grafton or some point on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and it was double what the rate from Wheeling was.

Mr. ALDRICH. Ought it not to be on some local road, from some inaccessible point?

Mr. CAMDEN. It is on the same road, going in the same direction.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think the rates ought to be more from a point where it has competition by water than from a point that is inaccessible to competition of that kind?

Mr. CAMDEN. I say to the Senator that on the same road, going in the same direction, the road ought not to charge more from a point that is 100 miles nearer to market than from a point that is 100 miles more distant, going in the same direction, over the same rails, and at the same expense.

Mr. ALDRICH. Ought it to charge as much?

Mr. CAMDEN. I do not think it should, but we are disposed to be liberal on that question and give the railroads a large margin of discretion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be glad, if the Senator from Georgia would allow me to interrupt for a moment longer, to have the Senator from West Virginia give us the figures, the price of the transportation of cattle from Chicago to Baltimore and from the point in West Virginia where the discrimination is, that we may have an investigation of the fact.

Mr. CAMDEN. I do not know that I can give the exact figures, and if I could I would not be disposed to do so. I am not making any particular railroad the object of my amendment; I am contending for a principle which ought to apply to all railroads on freight going in the same direction over the same line of road. If the facts do not exist, then my amendment does not hurt anybody; if the facts do exist, the matter ought to be corrected.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not suppose the Senator was basing his amendment on merely a hypothetical case, but thought he knew the facts which justified it.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am not placing it on a hypothetical case.

Mr. BROWN. My honorable friend from West Virginia says he is contending for a principle in his amendment. I take it therefore, of course, according to his understanding of it, that he is contending for a just principle. He says that justice requires that no less amount should be charged for a longer than a shorter distance, but you may charge as much for a shorter as for a longer distance.

What justice is there as a principle of transportation in permitting a railroad that runs between Chicago and New York to charge the same rate from Chicago to New York that it charges from West Virginia to New York? Why not make it more or less? Why confine it to just the same? Why say that you shall not charge less for the longer distance? Why not make the charge just so much per mile? In other words, how is it just to charge as much for a thousand miles as you charge for 20 miles; and it is admitted that that could be done under the Senator's amendment? Is that right? Is that a principle? Is it a just principle that the Senator is contending for?

Mr. CAMDEN. I do not contend that that is a just principle, but I contend that railroads must have a certain amount of discretion in fixing their rates in order not to do them an injustice. By the amendment they are simply limited to not charging more for a shorter than a longer distance. I am content to take that amendment, one step that much in advance, and leave that discretion. Of course the bill will regulate itself; it will equalize the freights. When it comes to competitive points the difference in distance must be recognized, and rates will be made different from the original point of departure, and that rate will apply to the next nearer point, and so on.

Mr. BROWN. What possible good does my friend do the country by curbing or limiting the railroad discretion when he lays down a rule by his amendment that they may charge as much for 20 miles as they do for a thousand miles? It is admitted that that is the amendment. Everybody who speaks on that side admits that and states that. If that is the justice of the rule I do not see how much more unjust it could be made. If you allow the railroad presidents that much discretion in fixing the rates, and it is safe to leave the discretion to charge as much for 20 miles as they do for a thousand miles, would it not be safe to leave the whole matter to their discretion as well?

Mr. CAMDEN. I will ask the Senator a question, if he will allow me.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, if it is not too long.

Mr. CAMDEN. While that discretion does exist, yet is it not a step in the right direction to say that they shall not charge twice as much for 10 miles as they do for 1,000 miles, which in some cases they are doing? You limit it by the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. No; my friend can not find, I suppose, anywhere in the world where twice as much is charged for 10 miles as is charged for 1,000 miles.

Mr. CAMDEN. I admit that, but the Senator put it in that extreme view and I accepted the statement.

Mr. BROWN. I put it only in this extreme view: The Senator admits himself that they may charge as much for 20 miles as they do for a thousand miles.

Mr. CAMDEN. Under the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I say there could not be a more unjust discretion vested in any body of men or any railroad presidents than the bill gives them by that amendment. Therefore nothing is done for the country by the amendment, because the discretion is as unlimited and as broad as any railroad men could desire it. But if the Senator from West Virginia has not made it broad enough my friend from Florida certainly has, for he says that they charge as much for 1 mile as they charge for 10,000 miles under the amendment. What more discretion does any railroad man want?

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to correct the statement of the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. I will submit to a question, but not to a speech.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am not going to make a speech. The Senator wants to get at the correct application?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; I want the correct statement.

Mr. CAMDEN. While the principle is true as contained in the amendment it is not the actual practice. If there were but two points, a point 10 miles from New York and a point a thousand miles from New York, and freights come only from those two points, that condition of things would exist; but when a railroad takes freight all along and is not allowed to charge more for a shorter than a longer distance, each point regulates the next point to it, and in that way the amendment will to some extent equalize freights throughout the country.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from West Virginia in my opinion is wrong again; practically he is not right. Freights are at Chicago and the owner wants to remove them to New York. Other freights are at Chicago and the owner wants to remove them out to a station 20 miles on the line toward New York. There is nothing whatever in his amendment which prevents the railroad from charging the same rate for the 20 miles that it charges for the thousand miles, or whatever the distance may be to New York. Therefore, take his rule and apply it in practice and it will not work. It will embarrass everything; it will break up and almost destroy, as I have already stated, the foreign commerce of this country, and very seriously cripple the inland commerce between the different States and sections of the country.

If we are going to regulate this business at all, let us regulate it on some just basis; let us fix rates upon a basis that is equitable and just all the way through, and let commerce take care of itself; but let us not say that it is a just rule, and that we are regulating railroads when we authorize them to charge as much for 20 miles as they charge for a thousand miles, or as much for 1 mile as they do for 10,000 miles, as Senators admit. That is no regulation of commerce which helps the people or helps anybody else. That is no regulation of commerce which is worth anything to anybody. But that is all that is offered to us under the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

I wish before I take my seat to call attention to one other matter. The committee found its labors to be exceedingly great, and yet after all it has done it has brought before us a very imperfect thing in the shape of the best bill, taken as a whole, that probably has ever been produced on this subject. We have in this country I know not how many miles of navigable rivers; probably some member of the Committee on Commerce knows. It is a very long distance when it is all put together. We appropriate annually from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 to keep those water ways in repair. We make an immense outlay. The Creator has formed them for the use of the people inhabiting this country, and the appropriations which are made to keep them in condition, in my opinion, are wise, and we ought to do that. It aids in regulating commerce. It aids by competition with the railroad systems; and it is a public highway made by nature for use to which the people are entitled.

Why is it, though, let me ask, that there is no attempt to regulate the river transportation? It permeates every section. It is all the time competing with the railroads. The furthest that the committee goes I understand is that where a water line makes a link in a through line it is treated as part of the line; but where it is a separate line running steamers, between Cincinnati and Memphis for instance, we turn them loose without any regulation whatever.

If we are going, as my friend from West Virginia says, to lay down sound principles and just rules to regulate commerce, why should we not regulate the whole of it? Why leave these millions and millions of tons subject to the whim and caprice of the navigation companies?

I have before me a statement, gotten up by a railroad man of a great deal of experience, in reference to some of this river transportation, and I should like to show how they observe the long and the short haul. We are insisting here as to railroads that we must establish stringent rules, as the honorable Senator from Iowa said, iron-clad rules, regulating that question.

Why do we not regulate it, where it appears to be grossly unequal, on the rivers? We do not attempt it at all. It shows how merely tentative legislation of this sort must be. We can take scarcely any step that we do not take at a great hazard. The committee doubtless felt that it was in this case too large an affair to undertake to regulate the railroads and the river transportation. At the same time the two run side by side in competition with each other in numerous cases.

But let us see whether they observe the rule that you must charge no less for a longer distance than you do for a shorter distance, and if they do not, it is to be hoped that my friend from West Virginia or some other person who wants to make this rule just and regulate the whole affair will bring forward proper amendments to regulate it. I refer first to the Ohio River. There are three or four classes of freights and they all run through with a good deal of regularity, each class being a little lower than the preceding one. I subjoin the whole table, so that the whole of it may appear in the RECORD. A perusal of it will show that these steamboat lines charge a larger sum for a less distance than for a greater distance as a constant daily practice.

In the matter of injustice in the long and short haul, and on the subject of pools and combinations, I have reliable information that steamboat lines indulge in such practices to a greater extent even than railroads.

There are three steamboat lines at Cincinnati, Ohio, navigating the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers below Cincinnati, to wit:

The Cincinnati and Louisville United States Mail Line, between Cincinnati and Louisville; the Cincinnati and Memphis Packet Company, between Cincinnati and Memphis; and the Cincinnati and New Orleans Packet Company, between Cincinnati and New Orleans.

These rivers are nature's great gift, improved with appropriations from the National Government. The steamboats are common carriers, and yet by agreement between these three packet companies, the Cincinnati and Louisville United States Mail Line is given all the traffic between Cincinnati and Louisville and intermediate points, the Cincinnati and Memphis Packet Company all the traffic between Louisville and Memphis, and the Cincinnati and New Orleans Packet Company all the traffic between Memphis and New Orleans. In other words, neither the Cincinnati and Memphis Packet Company nor the Cincinnati and New Orleans Packet Company competes with the United States Mail Line on traffic between Cincinnati and Louisville.

Neither the United States Mail Line nor Cincinnati and New Orleans Packet Company competes with the Cincinnati and Memphis Packet Company on traffic between Cincinnati and Memphis, Tenn., and neither the United States Mail Line nor the Cincinnati and Memphis Packet Company competes with the Cincinnati and New Orleans Packet Company on business between Cincinnati and New Orleans below Memphis, Tenn.

All these lines navigate portions of the same river, and yet by combination they divide territory and destroy competition, and if an independent boat is put into the trade to give the people the benefit of competition, they take a boat out of the regular line, start it after the independent boat, running it on the same days, to and from the same points, at ruinously low rates, until the independent boat is, for want of revenue to sustain itself, forced into the combination or tied up on the banks of the river by the sheriff for debt accumulated during the fight.

What is said of the Ohio and Mississippi River packet companies will apply with equal force to combinations between steamboat lines in other rivers.

I have before me the freight tariffs of all the companies where I have referred to the discrimination as to a longer and shorter haul, which will sustain all that I have said. If any Senator has any curiosity to see them they will be at his disposal. Here is one of the largest branches of interstate commerce of any other, that of all the navigable rivers in the United States, where we are making no attempt to regulate it. We are leaving those lines to form such combinations as they please, to form such pools as they please, to make such arrangements for mutual protection as they choose. They may drop out of the line when they please and charge twice as much for a short haul as they do for a long haul; and yet we are wrangling as to how we shall regulate railroads and leaving all that business open.

I think before we conclude this debate, and before we take the final vote on the fourth section, I shall offer an amendment so as to include transportation by common carriers on rivers. If it is right as to railroads it is right as to rivers. I do not go into the ocean or into the lakes, but where there is a river and a steamboat running upon the river, I do not see why the same rule should not apply to that which applies to the road that is built alongside the river.

I believe these are all the observations I care to submit at present.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, it seems to me that a natural and obvious proposition of justice is that a man shall be paid according to the labor he does. I do not see how any one can deny that. The tendency of all the workings of human society is to inequality, and as much as that is to be regretted in a democratic form of government, in many things it is not possible to avoid it. The diligent man will get ahead of the slothful one; the careful and thrifty man will surpass the negligent and extravagant one; the sober man will exceed the drunkard; the able man will pass far beyond the weak man; so that in most things it is not possible for government to help it or attempt to remedy this inequality.

But surely, sir, all will agree that it is proper that government by legislation should not contribute to this inequality. Corporations given an artificial existence by government for purposes of serving the public are affected with a public interest, as the courts say. They are therefore public servants, and their conduct is subject to correction, regulation, and control on the part of the power which calls them into being and gives them their privileges.

One of the most obvious duties on the part of the Government therefore is to prevent abuses, and to correct inequalities which these corporations create between those who patronize them. One of the most obvious of all those inequalities is the one we are attempting to regulate and control by the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, to wit, in the language of the bill, if I quote it correctly, that no railroad shall charge more for the shorter than for the greater distance when the freight is carried in the same direction and over the same line of road. The Senator from Georgia objects to the converse of the proposition as being quite as unjust as the proposition itself; that is to say, that it is unjust to permit the roads, which the bill after the adoption of the amendment would do, to charge as much for the short haul as they do for the greater one. That is admitted. I do not suppose there is any pretense on the part of those who favor the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia that it is just in a corporation to charge as much for the short haul as it does for the long one. The proposition is simply to redress a part of the injustice by saying that the corporations shall not charge more.

I admit the inefficiency of the bill in its whole arrangement and I have only favored it as tentative legislation in the proper direction. It falls far short of doing justice, but we have been so often warned of the danger of attempting to interfere with commerce, which we are told should be left to its own devices and to work out its own salvation according to the laws of political economy, generally resulting in damage to the people—we have been, I say, so often warned of the danger of interfering, that it seems that legislators are afraid to set the coulter very deep at the beginning, and instead of saying by the bill that a corporation should neither charge more for the short haul than for the long one, and should not charge as much for the short haul as for the long one, we stop short on the first proposition, to see if the world is going to come to an end before we try something more.

It reminds me very much of the story of a man who went into a saloon in some Western country where they sold a quality of liquor which used to be known in your country, sir [Mr. SEWELL in the chair], as Jersey lightning. [Laughter.] He called for two glasses, which the saloon-keeper accommodatingly poured out for him. He saw an antiquated, odoriferous, and oleaginous African standing near by, and he called to him and asked him if he did not want to take a drink. With a tragic air which would have done credit to an actor he said, "Boss, I'll tell you no lié about it, I would;" whereupon the colored gentleman drank his spirits, and the white customer who had called for the two glasses went and took a seat. The saloon-keeper asked him if he was not going to drink his spirits. He said, "Please wait fifteen minutes, and if that nigger don't die I will try mine." [Laughter.]

The proposition here is admitted on all sides that it is not only wrong, but it is an outrage to charge a man who lives 100 miles from Chicago—for that is the town which now is attracting more attention than any other city in the Union, I believe—as much for hauling his freight from Chicago 100 miles as is charged to the man whose freight is hauled from Chicago a thousand miles to New York. I say it is not only admitted that that is an outrage, but that it is even an outrage to charge him as much as is charged to the man who has the long haul from Chicago to New York. But so fearful are we of disturbing commerce, so terrible are the dangers which overhang us if we undertake to control a ring, that we have concluded to try the effect of limiting the charge to the same for the hundred miles that is charged for the thousand miles, and then if there is not a great cataclysm and nature is not convulsed we may perhaps yield to the demands of the shippers of the country and after a while say that the corporation shall not charge quite as much.

Let us take this and be thankful, and like St. Paul when he came in sight of the Three Taverns, thank God and take courage. I am willing for one to try it; and I should like to meet any gentleman in discussion before a crowd of people who had shipments to make as to the justice of this proposition. This is a different forum. I would divide time with him, sir, and give him the beginning and closing on the proposition that it is right to charge a man as much for 100 miles' haul as for 1,000 miles. Senators on the other side, I believe, do not pretend to justify it upon abstract principles of right and wrong, but they say that it would operate against the man who has the long haul, it would increase his freights, and it would increase the rates from the great West to the seaboard.

Mr. President, what does that admit? It admits that under the influence of competition the railroads are hauling freight from distant points in the great West at rates by which they make no money, and that they are maintaining their roads by an extortion upon the men who live at the intermediate points and whose shipments come within the meaning of the short haul. That is what it means.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think that it appeared from the evidence which was taken by the Interstate Commerce Committee that except in rare instances, perhaps for a short time, any through railroad business was done at rates which did not under the circumstances pay something. I have heard it stated over and over here that the through business was being done at a loss or done at rates which paid nothing, but I do not think such is the fact. I think this is the fact, however——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator to explain——

Mr. PLATT. Let me finish my sentence, please. I think it is the fact, however, that the business is done at a rate which if applied to the whole traffic would not earn a great deal of money, which would not earn money enough to pay any dividends upon the securities of the company.

Mr. HOAR. That is exactly what I wanted to have the Senator explain. I beg his pardon.

Mr. VANCE. I am obliged to the Senator from Connecticut for the suggestion. I was going to argue the other branch of the proposition. The argument here is either a confession that they are losing money on the long haul which they are obliged to make up by extortion upon the short haul, or else it is an admission that they are making money on the long haul, and therefore their extortion upon the short haul is absolute robbery.

Mr. KENNA. That is a self-evident proposition.

Mr. VANCE. It is a self-evident proposition, I think. So long as Senators give us the reason that we can not maintain these great lines, that we can not afford facilities to that great and boundless and fertile West which would enable it to throw its products upon the markets of the seaboard and into Europe without this extortion upon the short haul, then it is a very respectable argument founded upon necessity, and would come well within the meaning of the terms which are usually applied to a high protective tariff.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him for his answer?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I do not myself in my vote agree that the charge for the short haul is an extortion, whether it be less than the charge for the long haul or not, necessarily. I do not understand that that is admitted by any considerable number of persons in the country. There have been such times in the past, but it is not claimed that the railroad rates to-day are such anywhere, unless there may be very few exceptions indeed, that they can be construed as an extortion.

As I understand the proposition, it is exactly this, which I might illustrate by a very simple instance of a stage-coach. Suppose you have got a stage-coach running from a point 20 miles out of Elizabeth City, or any other town in your State, and it can take eight passengers a day, who are dropped on the way, and it charges them a dollar apiece. That charge just pays the entire expense and cost of the line, the drivers' wages, supporting the horses, and repairing the vehicle and harness, and that is all; there is no profit. At the end of the road the stage is competed with by a railroad, which takes passengers from end to end of that road for half a dollar apiece. If the stage charged the passengers who went the whole length the full dollar which it charges the others, which is a fair price, it would not get any of them; but still by taking in competition with the railroad at half a dollar the few passengers it can get to go through, it enables it to make a little profit and that keeps the line out.

That is precisely a very homely and simple illustration of this railroad problem as it appears to us who vote against the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia; and it does not answer our argument or help us to be won over to the other side to call it a comparison of extortion committed on one set of people for the benefit of another. These railroads are built primarily for the use of the localities through which they go. The land is taken, the right of eminent domain exercised, through those localities, and the railroads are to be compelled by the bill to deal with them at reasonable rates without extortion; and if they undertake any extortion on a single locality in the United States affected by interstate commerce, here is a mechanism which will cure that defect, as we hope and believe.

That being done and the rights of these parties being secured, here is a railroad running from Chicago to New York or Boston which says: "If I undertake to charge the same reasonable rates for the wheat which I take from point to point, I can not compete with the water way, I can not compete with the Canadian railroad, and I can not get it at all, because the farmer, on paying me that same rate, can not sell it in the European countries, he can not afford to raise it, and the community will stop. But having this apparatus of cars and railroad track and so on, running for the benefit of these localities, I can take on this through business at a less rate than I am charging them, and still make something on the whole."

Perhaps I am all wrong in this, but it does seem to me that there should come from gentlemen who think so an answer to the argument as I have stated it, and that the time should not be wasted in trying to persuade us that we must stop extortion or that there is any extortion on the localities.

Let me repeat once more, the bill has a mechanism independent of the fourth section which, if it works and so far as the bill has any vigor or vitality at all, is to afford a remedy in the courts for every man who travels as a passenger or sends any freight ten miles, so it be a passage from one State to another, throughout this entire country, and that is to be put a stop to as far as we can.

Now, then, the Senator comes in and says, when you have done that, if a railroad finds that there is some through business which it is to do in competition with the water ways, or with the Grand Trunk Railroad, or the Mississippi River, or the Atlantic Ocean, or which it is to do to carry grain to Europe, which, unless it does at half price will not be done at all, you shall not do it at half price except on the condition that the entire business of that road is done at half price.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I yielded for a question and I got a speech.

Mr. HOAR. No; I did not ask the Senator to yield for a question; I asked him to yield for a suggestion, and he got one.

Mr. VANCE. Then I got a speech for a suggestion. I yielded for a short haul and I got a long one. [Laughter.] That is another instance of the extortion which is practiced upon short-haulers.

Mr. HOAR. If my honorable friend will haul that proposition of mine any distance whatever I should like to look on at the process.

Mr. VANCE. If I were to haul that proposition far I should think I had made a water-haul. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order will be preserved in the galleries.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to know if my friend from Massachusetts objects in a matter of morals to the proposition that all men should be charged according to the service which is rendered them; that all men should be taxed according to their ability to pay? I am sure he would not; he has not.

Many ingenious efforts, such as comparing transportation by railroad to a stage-coach, have been made to avoid the force and effect of the proposition, but it remains the same; that in all human transactions a man should be charged according to the service which is rendered him.

Mr. President, if you will pardon me for giving an illustration in my homely way, I was down in the lunch-room but a short while ago. I took a sandwich and a glass of milk, which was a very short haul. A Senator not far from me took a porter-house steak and accompaniments. That was a long haul. Now, do you not know that if the keeper of the restaurant had charged me more for that short haul than he did my neighbor for the long haul there would have been a disturbance of the peace in this Capitol before many minutes. [Laughter.] The matter is too plain to talk about, it is too open and palpable to doubt. No man of common sense, no man out of an idiotic asylum, doubts the soundness of the proposition that you must pay for what you get, and that you must be charged according to the service which is rendered.

Those of us who favor this relief to the people of this country, who favor this proposition, admit that the Senate of the United States or Congress or even the Legislatures of the States for that matter having railroads wholly within their States can not resolve themselves into a board of directors and determine every individual item of charge that a railroad shall make. Nobody is attempting to do that; but we are attempting within bounds and within safe and reasonable bounds to place or limit upon the power of a railroad corporation to charge whatsoever it pleases without regard to service or distance. That is what we are attempting to do by this amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. VANCE. I yield to the Senator rising to ask a question.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The bill makes a provision that the short hauls shall not be charged more than a reasonable and just price.

Mr. VANCE. I know.

Mr. MCMILLAN. No railroad company under the bill can charge for a short haul more than a reasonable price. Now, is there any objection to permitting the same road to haul a longer distance for the same sum if it so pleases?

Mr. VANCE. I understand that, sir. Who is to say what is reasonable?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The commissioners under the bill and the courts can determine that question.

Mr. VANCE. The bill allows them to charge as much, not more, and that is a construction for the courts or the commissioners.

Mr. MCMILLAN. As much as what?

Mr. VANCE. As much as for the long haul.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The only regulation is that they shall not charge more than a reasonable price in all cases, and therefore the short haul can not be charged more than is reasonable. Now, you deprive the communities of the benefit of all the competition for long hauls where the roads would be compelled to charge a lower price where there is competition.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will excuse me, that is precisely what I desire to do. I desire to deprive any portion of the American people of the benefits of competition which competition is maintained at the expense of the rest of us.

Mr. MCMILLAN. But the competition is not so maintained; the short-haul people have the limitation of the law that they shall not be charged more than a reasonable sum, and the courts can enforce that law. Then the only provision of the bill is as to a long haul, that where competition exists the communities can have the benefit of it; and by placing this limitation upon it you destroy competition on commerce throughout the country.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to make a suggestion in that connection?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly, sir.

Mr. KENNA. The right spirit of the provision in the bill as it now stands, and as embodied in the amendment of my colleague which was adopted yesterday, and as it has been presented to Congress in both Houses in one form or another for fifteen years and more with reference to the question of the reasonableness of the charge as suggested by the Senator from Minnesota, is in the abstract, and if you choose to put it so, in the arbitrary proposition that it can never be reasonable to charge more for hauling a car-load of freight a hundred miles than a thousand miles, or more for 2,000 miles than for 3,000 miles. The only limitation which the amendment imposes is involved in the proposition that while you may charge as much for 10 miles as for 10,000 miles, you shall not under the Constitution of this country, which imposes upon Congress not only the power but the duty to regulate the interstate commerce of the country, charge more for shorter than for longer hauls, and thereby invest the railroad corporations of the country with the arbitrary, undisputed, and unquestioned right and power to regulate the interstate commerce of fifty million people.

Mr. MCMILLAN. In that connection permit me to show the Senator from West Virginia that he is mistaken.

Mr. KENNA. I shall be delighted, if I am mistaken, to discover the fact.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The bill only places a limitation upon the rates that they shall be reasonable. It requires every company to charge a reasonable rate for all distances.

Mr. KENNA. I take issue of fact with the Senator.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Just let me show the Senator that he is mistaken. For a short haul the bill prevents any railroad company from charging an unreasonable rate, and it requires it to charge a reasonable sum.

Mr. KENNA. Precisely.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It does not require the railroad company to charge any sum; it does not fix any price; so that it may charge less than a reasonable sum if it desires to do so.

Mr. KENNA. The companies ought to be prohibited by law from charging less than a reasonable sum. That is essential.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If the railroad company for the long haul sees proper to charge less than a reasonable sum, it may do it, and where competition exists it may be compelled to do it in order to get the trade; and the communities where the competition exists have the benefit of it. But by compelling them to charge more than they would otherwise be required to charge, you establish a reasonable rate at an intermediate point. Then the reasonable rate must be charged for the longer haul, and it must be greater, so that all competition is taken away.

Mr. KENNA. The proposition of the Senator from Minnesota, like the proposition of every Senator on this floor who urges opposition to the amendment, that the railroad should not only be allowed but should be required to charge reasonable rates, involves us in the old geometrical question as to the size of a lump of chalk. What constitutes a reasonable rate is precisely the thing which the people of this country are unwilling to leave to the arbitrary discretion of the railroad commission.

I do not want to interrupt my friend the Senator from North Carolina in his speech, but I do want to reiterate the fact that in the amendment of my colleague which was adopted yesterday, and which seems to be the bone of contention here, the simple principle is announced that without interfering with railroad rates—I dislike to hear the term "rates" mentioned in the line of this discussion, because there is no question of rate involved in it—without reference of any kind or character whatever to interference with the traffic of railroads or their freights, it has been deemed by the friends of this measure a reasonable limitation that they should not be allowed to charge in gross more for a shorter haul, even if that shorter haul be 10 miles, than for a longer haul, even if that longer haul be a thousand miles. It is an equalization which is essential to restoring to Congress a prerogative which has heretofore been usurped by the railroad companies of this country to control its interstate commerce and to give to the West or any other section the great markets of the East, giving to the one to the exclusion of the other. That is the real principle involved in it after all.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KENNA. I can not yield the time of my friend the Senator from North Carolina. I should be glad to do so, if I had an opportunity.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will allow me to ask the Senator from West Virginia a question?

Mr. VANCE. What is the Senator's object in interrupting me?

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia a single question.

Mr. VANCE. Is it a Massachusetts question or a Rhode Island question? [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a Rhode Island question. I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia if I understand him aright in saying that under the provisions of the fourth section of this bill as it has been amended on the motion of his colleague it would be lawful for a railroad company to charge the same sum for carrying certain freights 10 miles or 10,000 miles? That is what I understand to be his proposition.

Mr. KENNA. Under the law as it stands now they may charge a man as much for carrying a horse fifty——

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not talking about the law as it stands, but as it would be under the provision of the fourth section as amended.

Mr. KENNA. I am going to answer the Senator if he will permit me and if my friend the Senator from North Carolina will permit me.

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. Under the law as it now stands a railroad company may charge a man for carrying a horse 25 feet as much, or as many times more as it pleases, as it charges the same man or any other man for carrying a horse across this continent. This provision does not interfere with that. This provision undertakes, and that is the real meaning of it; that is the spirit in which ten years ago, and more than ten years ago, the fourth section of what is known as the Reagan bill, which is involved in the amendment, was framed, namely, to divest the railroad company and to reinvest Congress with the powers conferred upon it and imposed upon it under the Constitution to regulate the interstate commerce of this country. We do not say, and the friends of this measure do not pretend to admit, that it is right, or that it is fair, or that it is just, or that it can be defended, that a railroad company should charge a man as much for carrying a car-load of cattle, for instance, 50 miles as 500 miles or 5,000 miles; but this amendment does not interfere with that proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then it can be done?

Mr. KENNA. It admits at least the exercise of the power of the railroad company to equalize this question by carrying a car-load of cattle from San Francisco to New York as cheaply as from Saint Louis to New York; but it denies to the railroad corporations of the country the power to say that they will give to Baltimore, Saint Louis, or Chicago over Wheeling, or give to any particular shipping point in any State over a shipping point in another State a monopoly of the market on the seaboard, and thereby usurp and exercise powers and functions to regulate the interstate commerce of the country and make markets at will for their favorites.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope some time later on in the discussion the Senator will give us his reasons for stopping in the reform just at the point he does and why he continues to limit it.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from West Virginia has no disposition to stop in this reform; and the Senator from Rhode Island has intelligence enough to understand the difference between a movement to take hold of the business of the railroads of the country and run it and a movement to assert on the part of Congress its power and its duty to regulate the interstate commerce of the country. I am in favor of this measure of reform; and where does the Senator stand? Let him go as far as I do in the line of reform and then complain that I do not go farther.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, it has been so long since I was on the floor that I have forgotten what I intended to say, I believe. I was going to say something, I think, on the subject of all freights having to be reasonable and just, and to comment somewhat upon the difficulty of coming to a conclusion as to what was reasonable and just. It appears to be a "faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation," but I think in practice it will be very difficult to arrive at what is reasonable and just. A witty man once remarked that a man and his wife were one it is true, but which one was a big question. [Laughter.]

What enters into the elements of a just freight charge? Will you compare with the charges that were once made by the wagoner on the dirt road? How will you arrive at it? Will you take into consideration the interest upon capital; and if so, how much and what profit shall be allowed? It seems to me that much the most practical way to remedy this defect is not to trust to the commissioners, whoever they may be, for arriving at a conclusion, however reasonable and just, but to fix a boundary at least beyond which they shall not pass by saying that they shall not charge more; and then I shall have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa that this shall not be construed to mean that they may charge as much, for the one would be merely perpetuating an injustice in a less degree, and that would be about all.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. Use of the expressions "long haul" and "short haul" has been made very frequently, and apparently with the idea that those who live a long distance, at New York and other central points, will be the beneficiaries. Practically, every point beyond the competing point, it makes no difference how far or how short it may be beyond competition with water ways or beyond competition with other competing railroads, is a short haul, whether it is a thousand miles or fifteen miles. For instance, I live, say, 2,000 miles from New York. It is a short haul to go to my home, but it is a long haul to go to Galveston, for there the line will be in competition with a line of steamships. That is the whole of it, and nobody in the West or South is affected except at terminal points where competition is made.

Mr. VANCE. I am much obliged to the Senator from Texas for his suggestion. In relation to the matter of competion by water ways I desire to say that the suggestion that the railroads which center at Chicago are compelled to compete with the water ways to New York and with the Canadian railroads is entirely, and as I understand the history of it, absolutely answered by what has taken place on the Pennsylvania Railroad. I understand that Pennsylvania has almost in so many words on its statute-book the language of our amendment, that the Pennsylvania Railroad shall charge no more for a short haul than for a long one, and for twenty, or perhaps twenty-five years, the Pennsylvania Railroad has operated its cars between Chicago, Philadelphia, and New York in competition with the water ways by the canals of New York, and the Canadian railroads ever since they have been built, and that it has conformed to that law, and yet there has been no ruin or no damage sustained by reason of the low prices of the long haul.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it; and a suggestion however dangerous, a state of things theoretically however terrible, is worth nothing when it is disproved by a single solitary fact which has tested the question by all the surroundings and circumstances necessary to test it. If the Pennsylvania Railroad could do that all the other roads in the country could do it; and whether they could or whether they could not, it comes back to the naked proposition once more, shall we maintain a line of railroad, or any given lines of railroad, to enable them to compete in the hauling of freights cheaply from the great West at the expense of the individual shippers who live at the intermediate points? Shall we do that, or shall we control it by statute and declare that it shall not be done?

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] read us a long table or a statement containing averments of a similar condition of inequalities and injustices perpetrated by the water ways, by the steamboats on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. Does that furnish any argument against regulating such injustices on the part of railroads? It seems to me it only adds to the strength of our argument. I do not know whether the steamboat companies which he mentioned in his statement are incorporated companies or not. The steamboats may be the property of private individuals running without an act of incorporation. If so, then evidently Congress has nothing whatsoever to do with their charges.

Mr. BROWN. They are admitted to be common carriers.

Mr. VANCE. Well, I suppose common carriers could make their terms with their customers.

Mr. BROWN. They are common carriers between States. They pass over State lines.

Mr. VANCE. They might be subject to the control of Congress in the same way that the railroads are, and if so, and there are similar abuses there, I should vote with equal cheerfulness for any proper control and regulation of them. But surely it is not an argument that we should not prevent injustice from being perpetrated upon land to say that the like injustice has been perpetrated upon water. It seems to me that that would not be of any avail in this argument.

Mr. President, when I rose I did not intend to speak as long as I have done. I have listened very carefully to this discussion from its opening to the present time. It is a subject in which I feel the deepest interest, and in which I participated when it was last before the Senate. I shall vote for this bill with great pleasure in the absence of something better. I confess though that if the amendment was stricken out I do not believe it would be worth the paper on which it is written. if so glaring an injustice as the amendment is intended to remedy is to remain in the bill I do not know that it would be worth the while of any Senator who is desirous of giving real relief to the people to discuss it or to vote for it.

Mr. CULLOM. I doubt whether there is a quorum here to-day. A great many Senators are absent who it is very important should be here when the bill is voted upon. From my information there will be a very large number of Senators absent to-morrow and the next day, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Senate on Monday next at 5 o'clock shall close the debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or earlier.

Mr. CULLOM. Or earlier, if there is no disposition to debate the bill until that time, and that we shall dispose of the bill and amendments, giving time for explanations to those offering amendments, and a few minutes to those who do not agree to them.

Mr. CAMDEN. I think the Senate will be as full to-morrow as at any other time.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that a number of Senators are going to Pennsylvania and some to New York on private affairs.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator propose to postpone the business of the Senate on that account?

Mr. CULLOM. I only propose to acquiesce in what is going to be the condition of affairs in spite of us. I would prefer that we should have a session to-morrow and the next day, and finish this bill and do other business; but looking at the inevitable, I prefer very much that there should be a full Senate when the amendments are voted on and the bill is disposed of. I think we shall probably save time by fixing, by unanimous consent, Monday at 5 o'clock for the final disposition of the bill and amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the arrangement proposed, that at 5 o'clock on Monday the vote shall be taken on the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or earlier if a vote is sooner reached.

Mr. CULLOM. Or earlier.

Mr. KENNA. I have no objection on earth to the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois. I believe myself that the consummation of the work on the bill will be reached more readily by letting it go over until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, such will be the understanding.

Mr. DAWES. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SAULSBURY. So far as giving unanimous consent to take the vote at a particular hour is concerned, I think that ought not to be agreed to at this time.

Mr. CULLOM. I can not hear the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I say that my opinion is that we ought not to adopt any agreement to take the vote on the bill at 5 o'clock on Monday. We have had no measure before Congress which in its effect upon the railroad companies and upon the people of the country can be greater than the pending bill, and I do not think we ought to cut off any opportunities that any Senators may desire to discuss the matter. I do not know that I myself shall want to say a word about it.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me suggest to the Senator that if we have a session to-morrow the Senator will have an opportunity and the whole Senate will have an opportunity to debate the bill. I do not desire to have it understood that I am favoring an adjournment to Monday if the Senators will remain in session in sufficient number to do business. But whether we remain in session to-morrow and the next day or not, it certainly will give ample time to all Senators who desire to say anything upon the bill if we fix 5 o'clock on Monday for the final vote.

Mr. DAWES. I object to postponing the vote on the bill until Monday. I will agree to the vote being taken to-morrow, or if anybody desires to debate it further than to-morrow at any time on Saturday; but when it is proposed to agree on Thursday, after the measure has been before the Senate for nearly two weeks for discussion, that we shall not take the vote until Monday, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois to be that the vote be taken at the latest on Monday at 5 o'clock.

Mr. CULLOM. At the latest on Monday at 5, and as soon before that time as the Senate may be ready to vote. I wish to make one suggestion in reference to the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts. The bill has not been considered by the Senate for two weeks by any means. It has been considered by snatching an hour once in a while from the business which the Senator from Massachusetts and others were very anxious to have considered, and it has had but very little time really before the Senate for discussion.

Mr. DAWES. And one would think that the Senator would prefer that method of considering it.

Mr. CULLOM. Not by any means.

Mr. DAWES. Then I suggest to the Senator to propose to have the final vote to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Take it now.

Mr. CULLOM. We will take it now, if the Senate is ready.

Mr. DAWES. Very well, take it now.

Mr. CULLOM. I am ready to vote now. All I desire is to have the measure disposed of as early as possible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 5, after the word "direction," it is proposed to insert:

But this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I desire briefly to say before the vote is taken that I will vote for this bill not because it is what in my judgment it should be, but because it is a step in the right direction. It fails in many respects to be what I desire to see enacted into law, notably it does not prohibit pooling, which destroys all competition, but it is in some respects better than the bill passed through the Senate during the last Congress on this subject. I would greatly prefer the bill known as the Reagan bill, and hope to see it superseded by amendment elsewhere by the Reagan bill before final action is had on it. I am unqualifiedly in favor of the amendment ingrafted on the bill which was proposed by the Senator from West Virginia. It is inherently unjust that more should be charged for the short haul than the long haul. It is inherently unjust that the people at intermediate points should be onerously taxed for the benefit of the terminal points. It is unjust that the many should be taxed for the benefit of the few. The railroads and the capital invested in them are owned mainly on the Northern and Eastern Atlantic seaboard. They are administered, of course, in the interest of terminal points in that section of the country. The long haul, which the whole country is taxed to maintain at bare cost of transportation, builds up Eastern centers but destroys cities and towns on the South Atlantic and Gulf seaboards. Galveston, New Orleans, Mobile, Savannah, Charleston, and Norfolk are all stationary or in a condition of decay for the simple reason that the long haul takes away from them the support of the country naturally tributary to them. It is at these points that Southern and many of the Western products should reach tide water and would reach tide water but for the discrimination in favor of the long haul.

It is at these points that cheaper water rates would be reached and water competition established, and here would come into requisition again a merchant marine such as formerly existed, but is now nearly extinct. It is the long haul which is responsible in large part for the disappearance of our coasting trade. This would be all right if it came about legitimately, but it is unjust to tax nine-tenths of the people of this country to bring it about. Equality between sections and people should be the motto of this Government, and the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia tends in that direction in the matter of transportation while in itself it is intrinsically just. That more should be charged for 100 miles than for 500 over the same road has no element of equity or right reason in it. It is made by the Constitution the duty of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, and it should be so regulated as to do equal justice to all sections of the country and all the people as nearly as may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. CULLOM. So far as I am concerned, rather than take up the time by calling the yeas and nays on the amendment, as I do not think it amounts to anything, I withdraw my opposition to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It only excludes an implication, that is all.

Mr. PLATT. Let us take the vote over again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the call for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn, and the Chair will again put the question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move as an amendment to strike out section 13 and insert what I send to the Chair.

Mr. PLATT. You will want to strike out something before section 13.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this is adopted, we can strike that out afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 13 of the bill in the following words:

That it shall be the duty of any district attorney to whom said commission may forward its report and certificate as provided in the next preceding section of this act, when it shall appear from such report that any injury or damage has been sustained by any party or parties by reason of such violation of law by such common carrier, to forthwith bring suit, in the circuit court of the United States in the judicial district wherein such violation occurred, on behalf and in the name of the person or persons injured, against such common carrier, for the recovery of damages for such injury as may have been sustained by the injured party; and if on the trial of said cause judgment shall be rendered against said common carrier, the court may allow a reasonable attorney's fee to the district attorney for prosecuting said cause, to be taxed as part of the costs; and in case of failure to recover, the United States shall pay the necessary costs of suit.

In any case where the court shall adjudge that the violation of law by any such common carrier has been wilfully continued after notice by said commission to desist therefrom, the court may award to any party injured such a gross sum by way of costs, as will reimburse all his costs and expenses, to be paid by such common carrier.

And when it shall appear by such report and certificate of the commission that any common carrier has neglected or refused to desist from the violation of the provisions of law cognizable by such commission, in compliance with the notice of said commission, it shall also be the duty of the district attorney to forthwith apply by petition, in the name of the United States, to the circuit court of the United States for such district, for a temporary injunction against such common carrier, and for an order on said common carrier to show cause why it should not be enjoined and restrained from the continuance of such alleged violation, and for such other and further relief as may be just in the premises. And when such petition and the report of the commission and its certificate showing that said common carrier persists and continues to violate the law have been filed as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of such court thereupon to issue a temporary writ of injunction restraining said common carrier from doing any further act in violation of the provisions of this act or other law cognizable by said commission, as set forth in the report of the commission, until said cause can be fully heard. Such court may enforce obedience to any such injunction, order, or decree, whether temporary or on final hearing made perpetual, by fine, proceedings for contempt, and by any or all other means within its lawful jurisdiction sitting as a court of equity; and for the purpose of making any order or decree in the premises, final or otherwise, such court shall be always open.

If any district attorney shall fail to apply for such temporary injunction and order to show cause, any person interested to restrain such violation may, on application to the court, be allowed to appear and be heard by himself or counsel, and to apply for such injunction and order; and such court may, in its discretion, appoint other counsel to prosecute proceedings. The circuit court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to try such causes, without regard to the citizenship of the parties thereto or the amount involved therein.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate, or refuse, or neglect to obey any lawful order or requirement of the commission in this act named, it shall be the duty of the commission, and lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to apply in a summary way by petition to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district in which the common carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be. And the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable. And such notice may be served on such common carrier, his or its officers, agents, or servants, in such manner as the court shall direct. And said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily as a court of equity, and without the formal pleadings and proceedings applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power, if it think fit, to direct and prosecute in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition. And if it be made to appear to such court on such hearing, or on report of any such person or persons, that the lawful order or requirement of said commission drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injuction or interdict to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or disobedience of such order or requirement of said commission and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or interdict, it shall be lawful for such court to issue writs of attachment on any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or interdict against such common carrier, and if a corporation, against one or more of the directors, officers, or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver, or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or interdict. And said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such common carrier or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or interdict, to pay such sum of money not exceeding for each carrier or person in default the sum of $500 for every day after a day to be named in the order that such carrier or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or interdict; and such moneys shall be payable, as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining or into court to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or into the Treasury; and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court. When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000, or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States under the same regulations now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal, but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution or any writ or process thereon. And such court may in every such matter order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable. Whenever any such petition shall be filed or presented by the commission, it shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, to prosecute the same, and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expense of the courts of the United States. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. EDMUNDS. The purpose of this amendment is to strengthen the object of the bill, and that is to secure to people who under the judgment of the commission are entitled to redress an immediate and summary remedy in an immediate and summary way, and to provide that when a judge of the circuit court of the United States shall determine that the order of the commissioners ought to be obeyed as a lawful and proper one, it must be obeyed; and that no number of corporation counsel appealing and giving bonds and putting the whole thing off for three years until everybody is dead and gone shall stay the execution of the order of the court; so that the corporation, the common carrier, must obey the order of the judge until it can show the court on appeal that it is an order which ought not to be made.

The object of the amendment is, putting it in technical form, to secure to people who claim to be injured and who the commission think have been injured, the right of having this decision of the commission go into effect and stay in effect until the common carrier can show some superior court that it ought to be stopped.

Mr. MORGAN. I will ask the Senator from Vermont if the word "interdict" is intended to include what is termed by some lawyers a mandatory injunction?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, that is exactly it.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not catch the beginning of the amendment offered, and I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont whether he proposes to strike out all of section 13 or only a part of it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The whole of section 13, which relates to this matter of applying to the court. In examining that section it appeared to me that it was not quite adequate to the purpose intended, and in order that it might be made absolute, and real, and immediate, in the interest of having the order of the commission obeyed until it could be shown to be wrong, and their orders having been confirmed by a court on application, then the thing must go on as the court and the commissioners together have determined in that way until it could be properly set aside.

Mr. PLATT. I ought to say on behalf of the committee, I think, that a somewhat similar provision was considered by the committee, and the committee felt that if the Senate would adopt such a provision it was quite desirable to have a short and summary method of hearing questions as to a common carrier who should refuse or neglect to comply with the order of the commissioners. But in looking it all over the committee were apprehensive that if any such radical measure should be proposed by it, the lawyers in the Senate would say that we were upsetting the whole course of practice in the circuit court, and that we were departing too far from the regular course of practice in the circuit court. If, however, the Senator from Vermont thinks it is not too great a departure, I believe the committee will join with him in desiring some such remedy to be provided, and for one I am in favor of the amendment.

The Senator from Vermont had shown the amendment to me prior to offering it, and the only objection that I saw to it was that it was so wide a departure from the established rules of proceeding in the circuit court, and the committee endeavored to provide what they thought would be a pretty summary remedy without violating the rules of practice in the circuit court.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if the bill is to mean anything at all, if it is to have any real effect upon the administration of the railroad system in the United States, no measure, it occurs to me, could be better devised for the proper control and direction of railroads who are law-breakers, than the one suggested by the Senator from Vermont. The experience, I think, of the bar of the United States has thoroughly established the proposition that the equity courts of the country have powers better adapted to the administration of railroad corporations and railroad affairs, when they are in trouble either from creditors or otherwise, than any common-law court. In fact, there is no other court that has that sort of pliancy of its processes or that sort of power of equitable determination which is adequate to the meeting of the various difficulties that have been suggested in debate here that arise upon the face of this bill itself.

I think, Mr. President, that that feature will be found in experience, whether the Senate now are prepared to appreciate it or not, as an indispensable part of this measure. Your common-law courts can never administer the justice that is requisite to the proper adjudication of the nice and difficult questions that will arise under this statute, because their framework and processes are so stiff and unbending that they can not accommodate themselves to the real necessities of the situation. I hope, therefore, that the amendment may receive the favorable consideration of the Senate, and be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this is a very important amendment, I think. I would suggest that it ought to be printed. I do not make any motion, however.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think this amendment had better be printed. It is a very long one and a very important one. We can not vote upon this bill now.

Mr. MORGAN. I have an amendment that I wish to come in as an additional section of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment under consideration will lie over and be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the bill is going on, the amendment will not lie over and be printed; it must be voted on.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Are there not amendments to other sections pending?

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No other amendment is pending now.

Mr. CULLOM. I think there are at least half a dozen amendments to this bill. These last two amendments are pretty long and pretty important. I hardly feel disposed myself to vote on them, unless it is really necessary, without knowing more about what is in them, and I ask again that by unanimous consent the vote on this bill and amendments be agreed to be taken on Monday at 5 o'clock—not later than Monday at 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois that the vote on the amendments and the bill itself be taken not later than 5 o'clock on Monday next?

Mr. CAMDEN. I ask the Senator why not go on with the bill until we come to a point at which a vote is to be taken?

Mr. CULLOM. We have got to that point now on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], a very long amendment, and there are quite a number of others.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There are two other amendments I wish to offer.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Iowa has amendments to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the arrangement proposed as to the vote?

Mr. CONGER. I should like for information to have the various amendments proposed and ready to be offered before such an arrangement is made. Of course they could not be taken up now. I wish to offer an amendment myself. I should like to have it offered now that it may be considered and printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment will be received.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest that any proposed amendment be offered now and printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive amendments for that purpose.

Mr. CONGER. I offer an amendment then that it may be printed. I propose to amend the first section of the bill in the sixth line after the word "used" by inserting these words:

Under a common control, management, or arrangement.

So as to read:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to suggest to my honorable friend from Illinois whether it would not, on the whole, be a compromise which would be accepted by everybody, to fix the time for voting on this bill not later than Tuesday next, at 3 o'clock. Some gentlemen think there may possibly be some aspects of it which will be presented that could not be discussed fully on Monday. I ask the Senator to try that.

Mr. CULLOM. I only want to say that I am very anxious to get along with the business of the Senate, and I am equally anxious to accommodate myself to the judgment of Senators; and if it can be understood that we can vote at 3 o'clock on Tuesday on the bill and amendments I shall be satisfied.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. Or earlier, if possible.

Mr. CULLOM. Or earlier if we can get to it, but not later than Tuesday, at 3 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to fixing any day, but I object to naming any specific hour for closing the debate on this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Then let us sit it out on Tuesday. Will that do?

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing to do that, or on Monday. We have had experience in disposing of bills when hours have been fixed. I object to fixing any hour.

Mr. DOLPH. I understood this bill this morning was in order immediately after the morning business and during the morning hour. I should like to know whether that is a continuing order or agreement so that this bill shall occupy the entire morning hour during the time intervening till Tuesday?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the original agreement, that it should occupy the morning hour.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know that I shall say one word myself on this subject, but this bill deals with interests larger than all the interests engaged in the industries of this country outside of the agricultural interest, and it seems to me that we ought not hastily to act upon measures affecting interests so large and involving questions, too, that are new to the legislation of the country. We had better spend a little time in debate than hastily to put upon our statute-book legislation that may prove ruinous to the great railroad interests of the country.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to say a word.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator remembers very well that on account of the lateness of the time when the bill was passed two years ago in both Houses we failed to secure any legislation. We are very liable to get into the same condition again and have no legislative result on this subject. It seems to me that in the interest of some legislation there ought to be as much dispatch as possible so as to get the bill through the Senate very soon.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to be understood. It is not because I feel any special interest in railroad companies. I own no stock in railroad companies, I have no interest in railroad companies, but I recognize the fact that this is a very important interest, and this is legislation the effect of which we can not in this Chamber sitting here fully determine, and we ought, therefore, to mature any action that is taken by the Senate in the best possible way even if it takes a month or two months; we had even better not legislate at all than to legislate in a manner that may prove ruinous to the great interests involved. Therefore I should be glad if the Senator would let the question go over. I suppose the Senate is competent to bring debate to a close whenever it feels that debate ought to cease, but the idea of fixing a particular hour on a particular day for the termination of a debate on a measure of this character I do not approve.

Mr. CULLOM. My object is to get a time fixed and get the subject disposed of at some period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to fix Tuesday for taking the vote on this bill? [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection to that proposition to fix Tuesday as the period for taking the vote on the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not later than that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not later than Tuesday.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the amendment I send to the desk be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is arranged by unanimous consent that the vote shall be taken not later than Tuesday.

The amendment referred to by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we are not to vote on the amendment I have had the honor to offer now, I ask that it also may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish it to leave the Senate Chamber to be printed until we see whether we are going to vote on it to-night or not.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the amendment which I offered with the whole paragraph in which it is proposed to be inserted be reprinted to show what it will be. That will be the first section, except the proviso.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to submit an amendment to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will be received. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has asked for the reading of his amendment; which will be read first.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. If two or more persons, with the intent to prevent the movement or running of any locomotive, car, or train of cars, used, or that is about to be used, in carrying passengers or property to or from one State to another, or to or from any Territory of the United States, or to or from any foreign country, or to or from any Indian tribe, shall conspire together, or agree together, or unite with a common intent unlawfully to obstruct or prevent the movement or running of any such train, car, or locomotive, or the loading or unloading of any such car, or train of cars, or to put in peril the personal security of any officer or employé of any railroad company engaged in moving or running, loading or unloading, such car, or train of cars, such persons so offending shall be guilty of unlawful conspiracy, and on conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, shall be punished for each such offense by imprisonment for not exceeding six months, and by a fine not exceeding $500, one or both, as the court trying the case shall direct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed. Now the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] will be read:

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 11, line 18, to strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may;" so as to read:

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, &c.

In lines 20, 21, 22, and 23 it is proposed to strike out all after the word "act" to and including the word "plaintiffs," in line 23, and insert the words "or other person."

In line 24, to strike out all after the words "common carrier" to and including the word "shall," in line 30, and insert:

Or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books and papers if so ordered), and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may.

In line 30, after the word "punished," to strike out to the end of line 31 and insert "by such court as a contempt thereof."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to offer two amendments, which I ask may be ordered to be printed after being read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 3 the following:

Any person or persons who shall directly or indirectly apply for or knowingly accept any favor, preference, or advantage declared by this section to be unlawful shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not less than $200 for each offense.

It is also proposed to add to section 2 the following:

And any person or persons who shall directly or indirectly apply for or knowingly accept in any manner not authorized by this act any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other form of reduction of rate, the allowance of which is prohibited by this section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not less than $200 for each offense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These proposed amendments will be ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN. I have some amendments I desire to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates, or rebates, or drawbacks on building material to persons or companies who construct on the line of road any mill, factory, grain elevator, or other structure of like character, which will materially increase the freights of the company, or greatly benefit the community where they are located: Provided, That all persons engaged in the construction of such buildings, factories, grain elevators, and other like structures shall have like rebates in like cases, and there shall be no discrimination against any one engaged in such enterprise.

Also on page 4, section 4, before the word "provided," in line 6, insert:

And this provision shall apply to transportation by common carriers on rivers as well as by railroads.

Also to insert the following after the word "tickets," in line 6, page 21:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates or free passes to ministers of the gospel, editors of newspapers, delegates to agricultural conventions, or religious assemblies.

Also to add the following as a new section:

SECTION —. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall willfully and maliciously destroy or in any manner hurt, damage, injure, or obstruct, or shall willfully and maliciously cause, or aid and assist, or counsel or advise any other person or persons to destroy or in any manner to hurt, damage, or injure, or obstruct any railroad engaged in interstate commerce or in carrying the mails of the United States or any branch thereof, or any bridge connected therewith, or any vehicle, or if an unauthorized person or persons shall turn, move, or in any manner interfere or meddle with any switch, gate, siding, or other appurtenances to any railroad, such person so offending shall be guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof, in the United States circuit court, which shall have jurisdiction of the offense, shall be imprisoned for a term of not less than four nor longer than eight years. If death ensues from such act to any person, the offender shall be guilty of murder, and punished accordingly. This penalty shall in no case interfere with the offender's liability to civil damages.

Mr. SPOONER. I gave notice yesterday that I would offer an amendment to this bill to cover what seemed to me to be a weak spot in it; that is, the failure of the bill to provide for the punishment criminally of extortion. I offer the amendment in order that it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill by inserting after the word "just," where the same occurs in line 31 of page 2, the words:

And every unjust and unreasonable charge for such service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like an opportunity to present some morning business that I have not yet been able to offer to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the motion to allow routine morning business to be presented.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LOGAN presented two petitions of citizens of Swanton, Ohio, praying for the passage of the service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Relief Corps of Danville, Pa., praying that an increase of pension be granted to Joseph Keffer, late a private in Company B, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a memorial in the shape of resolutions of the president and board of directors of the Merchants' Exchange, of Saint Louis, Mo., in behalf of the passage of the bill (S. 1877) to repeal sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 9 of the act of Congress approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," now pending before the Committee on Commerce, to which committee I move the reference of these resolutions.

The motion was agreed to.

EIGHT HOURS FOR LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2076) to extend to letter-carriers the advantages secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the hours of labor, reported it without amendment.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask leave to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (S. 1800) to secure to the Cherokee freedmen and others their proportion of certain proceeds of lands, under the act of March 3, 1883, and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be printed.

Mr. LOGAN. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 807) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war when it is reached; and I ask that the amendment and the report accompanying it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls have leave to withdraw her papers from the files of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; and

The bill (H. R. 5951) granting a pension to John M. Mattingly was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 10, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate the 6th day of May, 1886.

TERRITORIAL JUDGE.

James H. McLeary, of Texas, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Montana, vice John Coburn, suspended, the Senate having declined to advise and consent to the appointment of Charles R. Pollard, who was heretofore nominated to said office.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate May 6, 1886.

Frank Brown, to be postmaster at Baltimore, Md.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 6, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILLBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESCALERO INDIAN RESERVATION, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 1st instant from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a draught of a bill recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, providing for the payment of improvements made by settlers on the lands of the Mescalero Indian reservation in the Territory of New Mexico. The subject is presented for the consideration and action of Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 5, 1886.

BARGE OFFICE, NEW YORK CITY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect recommending a special appropriation for repairs and alterations of barge office, New York city; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the Senate amendments to this bill be numbered and printed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will direct that the bill, with the Senate amendments, be printed.

Mr. BLOUNT. And the amendments numbered.

The SPEAKER. That is always done.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOLMES, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PIRCE, indefinitely, for the purpose of taking testimony in his election case, as ordered by the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the formal call of committees for reports be dispensed with.

Objection was made.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont (by Mr. TUCKER), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the joint resolution (H. Res. 109) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I ask consent to file the views of the minority of the committee on this question.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] will have leave to file on behalf of the minority of the committee their views to be printed with the report of the majority.

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Mr. COLLINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. 8599) providing an additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 606) authorizing the removal of the statue of Maj. Gen. John A. Rawlins from its present location to a site to be selected by the Secretary of War; and

A bill (H. R. 661) granting the right of way through the Fort Selden military reservation in New Mexico to the Rio Grande, Mexico and Pacific Railroad Company.

ORDNANCE SUPPLIES TO DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8030) to authorize the Secretary of War to credit the Territory of Dakota with certain sums for ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said Territory, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LANDS DUE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

Mr. LANDES, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 4049) to authorize the State of Michigan to select, in the smallest legal subdivisions, the remainder of lands due said State under existing laws for internal improvements; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LAND GRANT TO WYOMING TERRITORY.

Mr. VAN EATON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6631) granting certain lands to the Territory of Wyoming for public purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LAKE MICHIGAN AND DETROIT RIVER WATER ROUTE.

Mr. ATKINSON, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4971) to provide for the survey of a water route to connect the waters of Lake Michigan with the Detroit River; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. ELLSBERRY, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1924) for the relief of Adam L. Epley; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ANNA A. PROBERT.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3610) granting a pension to Anna A. Probert; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANN KINNEY.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5389) granting a pension to Ann Kinney; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELLEN CORCORAN.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF JOHN S. FILLMORE.

Mr. ELY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2040) for the relief of the heirs of John S. Fillmore, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back the bill (H. R. 4694) to incorporate the Washington Traction Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON TRACTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, also reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 4694, a bill (H. R. 8600) to incorporate the Washington Traction Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 4694 was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF AQUEDUCT BRIDGE, ETC.

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge, or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 1717) to regulate the service of process in the police court of the District of Columbia; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. FREDERICK, from the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (S. 182) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

It was the understanding the minority should have leave to print their views to go along with the majority report. I now ask, by unanimous consent, to present the views of the minority, and to move they be printed with the majority report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. FREDERICK, from the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 2772) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic;

A bill (H. R. 1000) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic; and

A bill (H. R. 3114) to provide for the appointment of a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT AND GULF RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 7478) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills begins at thirteen minutes before 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on Agriculture; the pending business being the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HATCH. With a view of giving all the time possible for debate on this bill, I renew my request to the House that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from its further consideration, and it be considered in the House as in committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky (from his seat). I object.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that no objection has been made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first state the question. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and consider the same in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to move an amendment to it, but as the amendment has been voted on, unless there be consent, it can not be withdrawn.

Mr. HATCH. Then I offer an amendment. I move that all general debate upon the pending bill be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I trust such an important bill as this will not be hurried through the House without ample time for discussion.

Mr. HATCH. I have offered everything that is fair to gentlemen on the floor, and they have refused any proposition looking to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire what the measure is, as it has been some time since it was before the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill called up by the gentleman from Missouri is the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture.

The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri to limit debate to ten minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend by making it one hour and a half.

Mr. HATCH. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman of course was bound to yield the floor when he offered the amendment, which is itself subject to amendment. The first question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 31, noes 98.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it in order to accept the motion to give one hour and a half for debate on this bill when the rule only allows the committee one hour?

The SPEAKER. The only effect of the adoption of the amendment would be that the remainder of the time fixed for general debate, after the hour is exhausted to-day, would go over until the bill was next reached for consideration.

Mr. DUNHAM. Under the head of "unfinished business?"

The SPEAKER. As unfinished business. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] makes the point of order that no quorum has voted. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 17, noes 149.

Mr. HATCH. Now, I demand the previous question upon my motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask the yeas and nays on this vote.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; there being but 28 members in support of the demand and 122 in opposition—the affirmative not being one-fifth of the total.

Mr. HEWITT. Does it not require a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It does not. Under the Constitution one-fifth of the members present can order the yeas and nays.

Mr. TUCKER. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; there being only 31 members supporting the demand—being less than one-fifth of a quorum.

So the amendment of Mr. REAGAN was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to amend by making it fifty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has demanded the previous question. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 10.

Mr. HEWITT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HEWITT and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 163, noes 2.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 132, noes 6.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 160, noes 3.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House take a recess for one hour.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 11, noes 139.

Mr. HEWITT. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HEWITT and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 3, noes 160.

Mr. HEWITT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the demand for the yeas and nays is perhaps too late, the result of the vote having been announced; not only the vote, but its result.

Mr. HEWITT. I addressed the Chair the moment the figures were announced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman, but the statement is sufficient. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, there being but 4 members supporting the demand.

So the motion for a recess was not agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. My inquiry is this: Is there not some parliamentary method by which the majority can defeat its own measure other than by filibustering?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question for the Chair to determine.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 18.

Mr. BLOUNT. Count the other side.

The other side being counted, the negative vote was 122.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Monday next. The Chair was about to ask a division when the yeas and nays were called for.

The question being taken on Mr. BLOUNT'S motion, there were—ayes 6, noes 107.

Mr. BLOUNT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 89.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I give notice to the House that under the order adopted on Monday this will be the first bill called up on Thursday next.

Mr. DUNHAM. I am very glad to hear it.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. WELLBORN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. The pending motion at the time the committee rose was a motion submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to strike out section 13, on which there was a division, and no quorum appearing, the committee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised the point of no quorum had been made on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin to strike out the thirteenth section. The Chair requests the tellers, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, to resume their places.

Mr. WILLIS (one of the tellers). It is understood that this vote shall be considered as having been taken, and the gentleman from Wisconsin asks permission to address the committee for five or ten minutes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, it being considered that the vote has been taken on the former amendment.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Provided, That no survey shall be made under this section until all the improvements of rivers and harbors now in progress at the Government expense upon which estimates have been furnished by engineers to complete the work shall have been completed in accordance therewith.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of no quorum is withdrawn, and the motion to strike out the thirteenth section is disagreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir; and in offering the other amendment I desire to submit some remarks, not extended however, upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The amendment which I have offered provides that all the improvements on which the engineers have furnished estimates to complete the works now in progress shall be finished before the surveys incorporated in the present bill shall be made. It is not contended, Mr. Chairman, that the surveys in the section under consideration are not worthy of being made. For the purposes of this discussion, I will admit that they are of interstate importance, and pass that question. The statement made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] as well as the chairman of the committee that these surveys often develop the fact that some of the rivers and harbors named were not of such importance as to warrant expenditure upon them, and that therefore these surveys were of great value to the country, is true, sir, in a qualified sense. When we are ready to increase the number of improvements all over this country then it will probably be wise to order the preliminary examination contemplated by this section.

But I do protest that so long as the works are not completed which are already commenced no further surveys should be made. And why should we refuse to make these surveys at this time? Because, sir, this is simply a sly method of increasing greatly the number of items in the next bill. A goodly number of the surveys of one year become the improvements of the next.

An examination of the river and harbor acts which have passed this House since the year 1879 discloses the fact that a large number of all the surveys that are provided for in each act are incorporated in the next bill as new improvements and thus swell the expenditure of money for that year. An examination of the act of 1879 discloses the fact that it directed ninety-seven surveys. Of those ninety-seven surveys thirty-four were embraced in the next act, which passed Congress in 1880, as improvements, and money appropriated to commence the work. That is, 35 per cent. of the surveys of 1879 received appropriation in 1880.

In the act of 1880 there were one hundred and twenty-four surveys directed, and in the act of 1881 forty-one of those surveys were put in as new improvements and money appropriated to begin the work. That is, 33 per cent. of the surveys of 1880 received appropriations in the act of 1881,

The act of 1881 directed that in the ensuing year eighty-three surveys of rivers and harbors should be made, and the act of 1882 made appropriations to begin work on twenty-seven of those rivers and harbors. That is, over 32 per cent. of the surveys of 1881 received appropriations in the act of 1882.

The bill of 1883 failed to pass, and hence surveys that were included in the bill of 1882 had to secure admission to the bill of 1884. Now, then, the act of 1882 directed that one hundred and thirty-five surveys of rivers and harbors should be made; and in 1884 we find that the bill which passed made appropriations to begin the work on the thirty-four of those one hundred and thirty-five rivers and harbors. In other words, 25 per cent. of the surveys of 1882 crept into the bill of 1884.

The bill of 1885 was defeated in this House. Consequently many of the surveys provided for in the act of 1884 have been forced into this one. And I find that out of the one hundred and thirty-one surveys provided for in the act of 1884 there have been incorporated into this bill some twenty-six. Thus it is that about 20 per cent. of the surveys provided for in the act of 1884 are incorporated in this bill, and we are asked to make appropriations for the same.

The average number of the surveys ordered each year since 1879 which have found place in the succeeding appropriation bill as new improvements is something over 29 per cent. In this bill as it came from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors there were ninety-eight surveys provided for. The consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole has increased the number to one hundred and twenty-seven; so that the bill as it now stands provides for one hundred and twenty-seven surveys to be made during the next year at the discretion of the Secretary of War. Now, sir, taking the average percentage of increase in the number of the improvements year after year since 1879, resulting from these surveys, it will make in the next appropriation bill an addition of thirty-seven river and harbor items to be provided for as new improvements.

If we could complete the works that we have in hand this would be wise enough, assuming that the rivers and harbors named here for survey are of a national character; but when we complete by this bill only five out of the sixty-three works recommended by the engineers for completion it will be readily seen that this section has not the harmless character claimed for it by the friends of the bill. It will be readily seen that this very section providing for numerous surveys is made year by year the means of swelling the river and harbor bill unduly and loading the Government down more and more with unfinished contracts and incomplete works.

I say here and now that this is the time and place to stop. Every man on this floor should support this amendment. Every man in this House who feels something more than a national interest in this bill, who feels a local interest in the appropriations for his district, should respond to this call and vote to stop these additions to the river and harbor bill until such time as the works already recommended for completion shall be finished.

If you can be moved in no other way, the narrow interests of your share in this bill should arouse you. If you continue this system of increasing the improvements before completing those already in progress, the effect upon the appropriations for your districts will be that you must each year accept a less and less percentage of the estimates of the engineers to carry on your local works.

Every man here who is interested in the expenditure of the people's money upon business principles should take a stand for this amendment, and should aid in rejecting this section so prolific of bad consequences, this section which will certainly hatch out in the next river and harbor bill at least thirty-seven more such items demanding appropriations.

When the amendment was offered striking out these surveys the chairman of the committee stated that there was not $50,000 included in this bill for new items. I say to you gentlemen, from a careful computation, that there are more than $200,000 in it for absolutely new items. There are $173,000 in the bill for items which were included in the last act as surveys. So you can see something of the sweeping extent of the increase. But this is only the beginning. The policy of river and harbor committees as to these new works has always been to ask for only a small appropriation for a new improvement the first year, and thus to lead the Government in gradually until it is involved in carrying on the works at these various places, and when it is once fairly committed to them, then excessive appropriations can be demanded and we are compelled to yield.

Now, gentlemen, I say that business sense, good business management, demands that this should be checked, and checked right here at this time. And there is no better way to do it than to stop putting in these surveys, which is simply an insidious way of getting the Government committed to more and more of these improvements year by year. I say to you gentlemen who guard the avenues to the Treasury that it is your business to stand up at this time and stop this work. The people will not always bear this treatment meekly. The honest men are in the majority among the people. This has grown to a great abuse, and I tell you "when this snow melteth there shall come a flood." I tell you here and now that this system can not be carried much further. The time is near at hand when it will break down in this House with a crash that will shake half the members out of their seats. [Applause.]

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts, rose.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the House, I think, understands this matter, and I now ask a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. If the chairman desires to have the vote taken now, I will not occupy any time.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to cut off my colleague on the committee. I was not aware that he was on the floor when I addressed the Chair.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I have no desire to occupy time if the vote can be taken.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, there was some confusion when the amendment was read, and I ask that it be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. For examinations, surveys, and contingencies, and for incidental repairs, for which there is no special appropriation, for rivers and harbor, $100,000:

Provided, That no survey shall be made of any harbors or rivers until the Chief of Engineers shall have directed a preliminary examination of the same by the local engineer in charge of the district, or an engineer detailed for the purpose; and such local or detailed engineer shall report to said Chief of Engineers whether, in his opinion said harbor or river is worthy of improvement, and shall state in such report fully and particularly the facts and reasons on which he bases such opinion, including the present and prospective demands of commerce; and it shall be the duty of the Chief of Engineers to direct the making of such survey if, in his opinion, the harbor or river proposed to be surveyed be worthy of improvement by the General Government; and he shall report to the Secretary of War the facts, and what public necessity or convenience may be subserved thereby, together with the full reports of the local engineer. Said reports of preliminary examinations and surveys shall be made to the House of Representatives, and are hereby ordered to be printed when so made.

Mr. WILLIS. I propose to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. NEECE], if he be present; if not, I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BAYNE and others rose.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the last word of the section just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has been recognized.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the chairman of the committee [Mr. WILLIS] to say that he would give way if any gentleman had any amendment to offer.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments favorably to the House.

Mr. EVERHART. I desire to be heard on this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] was recognized.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; and I made a motion which I believe is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the committee do now rise——

Mr. SPOONER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the motion to strike out the last word in order while the bill is under consideration under the five-minute rule? In other words, can the committee rise and report the bill to the House until the five-minute debate has been exhausted and until my proposed amendment is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that if there is an amendment pending there ought to be action on that amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I am sure the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] will not press his motion. As soon as the last section of the bill was read I rose, was recognized, and moved that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments favorably. There was no pending amendment. The gentleman from Rhode Island had not the floor. I think there can be no misunderstanding about this.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Rhode Island offer an amendment?

Mr. SPOONER. I moved to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the order of business and parliamentary law, when there is an amendment pending action on that amendment takes precedence of a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island states that he offered an amendment.

Mr. ROBERTSON (to Mr. WILLIS). Let him have five minutes; that will save time.

Mr. SPOONER. The consideration of the bill is not completed as long as any gentleman desires to offer an amendment. [A pause.] It has been suggested to me by a member of the committee that if I would be satisfied with five minutes during the hour which the chairman of the committee [Mr. WILLIS] will have after the call for the previous question that time may be yielded to me.

Mr. WILLIS. I will comply with that request if the gentleman makes it, but I hope he will not make it.

Mr. SPOONER. My only object in asking to address the House at this time——

Mr. WILLIS. I say to the gentleman that I will agree to his proposition if he asks it, but I hope he will not ask it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. SPOONER. I want the committee and the House to understand distinctly the proposition which I desire to make. I wish when the proper time arrives to move to recommit this bill with instructions. I have sought five minutes now in order that I might briefly suggest to the committee my reasons for desiring to make this motion, the purpose of the motion, and, in brief, the instructions with which I desire that the bill be recommitted. If that opportunity will be conceded to me hereafter, and I shall lose no right by postponing my remarks and making the arrangement which I understand the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors suggests, I am willing to do so.

Mr. WILLIS. As the gentleman has already occupied a part of the time, I suggest that he had better finish his statement now.

Mr. SPOONER. Very good. I wish, then, simply to say——

Mr. KING. I rise to a question of order. Under what rules are we proceeding?

Mr. WILLIS. Under the rule of consent. I hope the gentleman from Rhode Island will be allowed to go on.

Mr. KING. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves that the committee rise, and then the gentleman from Rhode Island gets up and makes a speech. I do not understand under what rules we are proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] that the gentleman from Kentucky did move that the committee rise, but the gentleman from Rhode Island moved an amendment, and the Chair decided that he was entitled to five minutes to discuss it.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that none of the time occupied by these interruptions has been taken out of my five minutes.

I had hoped that in the progress of the consideration of this bill some of the unworthy projects it contained might be eliminated. But so far as we have proceeded that hope seems to have been unfounded; and earnestly as I favor the improvement of our water ways and a reasonably liberal provision for the demands of commerce, I can not see my way to honorably and consistently vote for a bill containing such provisions as this one now does. The project looking toward the purchase by the Government of the works of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company and the works of the Monongahela Navigation Company, with the immense expense involved, yet remain in this bill.

The scheme for relieving the State of Ohio of the Muskingum River improvement, so called, with its locks and dams and canals, and loading that burden and its attendant great annual expense upon the General Government, yet remains in the bill.

Nearly $4,000,000 under the provisions of this bill are to be cast into the Mississippi, largely for the improvement of private property rather than for public benefit, with little if any promise of improving navigation or benefiting commerce.

There are other projects for appropriations contained in this bill which it seems to me are entirely unworthy, or disproportioned in cost to any benefit which may be expected from the work.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Chief of Engineers has reported concerning the details of these river and harbor improvements; but the Secretary of War has submitted, as the amount which he considers ought to be appppropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors and incidental expenses concerning same, the gross sum of $10,176,920. And when the proper opportunity arrives I desire to move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with instructions to report a bill appropriating that sum, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, guided by the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers, being the total amount demanded by the Secretary of War, under whose supervision and charge all these improvements are, and to whose directions and responsibility I believe the proposed expenditure can, in existing circumstances, be most safely confided.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. EVERHART. I move to amend that motion by inserting the word "not," so it will read, "that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do not pass."

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Chairman, it is proper to commend the liberal conduct of the committee in the House; but, without disparaging their motives or their labors, we may not be indifferent to the defects of the measure they have introduced. The report is but a syllabus, with brief statement and scant argument; alludes to the engineer's estimates and some local demands only to say they were not complied with; admits some errors, deprecates criticism, and in some part disarms it. But the appropriations are remarkable for their number, diversity, and amount.

It appears that no spot or object is too grand or too insignificant to be ignored. The salt water and the fresh, the seacoast and the tow-path, the banks of the great lakes and the beds of little streams, leveed cities and sinecure ports, shoals where the mussels bury, and sloughs like, perhaps, "that Serbonian bog, where armies whole have sunk," receive in various degrees the care and bounty of the bill. And yet it is clear that the distribution is not always equitably averaged and applied.

Fifteen millions of dollars is "a good round sum" to be taken from the public purse; and yet this committee

> "The Gordian knot of it will unloose, > Familiar as their garter."

They pour it out with the exuberance and generosity of some high power; and it falls upon the favored places as freely as the golden shower of Jupiter on Danae. Nor is the sum in every instance directed by adequate importance or necessity. It is unrestricted by unpronounceable names, by obscurity of situation, by dearth of water, by mass of obstruction, by difficulty of distance, or by lack of people.

Bayous are to be improved where the alligator wallows and the pelican feeds; and inlets where King Frost holds his carnival in palaces of ice; and shores which seem as remote and fabulous as those of Calypso or Atlantis.

There is nothing, Mr. Chairman, which seems too incredible to be embraced within the limits of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BRUMM. If the Chair will recognize me I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIS. I move, Mr. Chairman, the committee rise.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has yielded his time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIS. I object; I have moved that the committee rise. I will give the time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania afterward.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. There must be some way in which my colleague can have an opportunity to conclude his remarks.

Mr. WILLIS. My object is to give the gentleman time in the way prescribed by the rules.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What is the regular order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the business of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. My point of order is that the Chair recognized the gentleman from Missouri, who took the floor and yielded his time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. My point is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will hear me for a moment, there is no room for any division of sentiment on the question. The rules provide that five minutes shall be allowed in support of an amendment, and then without unanimous consent there can be no further debate until five minutes shall be occupied in opposition to it.

I simply propose to move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate to five minutes, with the intention of yielding that time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I shall ask unanimous consent, if necessary, that five minutes' time be granted to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with the understanding that that will close the debate upon this section and amendments thereto.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask for a ruling on the point of order I have made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a ruling upon the point of order, and the Chair is ready to rule upon it. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVERHART], who consumed five minutes in support of his amendment. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] then took the floor, having been recognized by the Chair. He yielded his time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is now entitled to the five minutes additional by unanimous consent of the House, because it requires unanimous consent of the House to give him ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. I object, for the reason that I shall give the gentleman five minutes after the debate is limited.

Mr. DUNHAM. But the gentleman from Missouri wants five minutes also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request to the House. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Pennsylvania five minutes' additional time?

Mr. REAGAN. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. I now ask that by unanimous consent the debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be limited to five minutes; intending to yield that time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PERKINS. But the gentleman from Missouri wants five minutes also.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I will ask to make it ten minutes, and yield him five.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Upon what question was the gentleman from Pennsylvania addressing the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Upon an amendment offered by him.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It was that the bill be laid aside to be reported adversely to the House, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EVERHART. My amendment was that the bill be reported adversely instead of favorably.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I suggest to the Chair that the five-minute rule does not apply to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAYNE. By way of simplifying this matter, as it is not necessary to wait for the amendment to be written, I will state that the amendment of my colleague is that the bill be reported back adversely. The proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky was that it be reported favorably. My colleague moved as an amendment that it be reported unfavorably.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It was to insert the word "not" before the word "favorably" in the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] now asks unanimous consent that the time for debate on this paragraph of the bill and all amendments be limited to ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WILLIS. I now yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVERHART].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled, by unanimous consent, to five minutes, and after the expiration of five minutes more, which the Chair understands is to be yielded to the gentleman from Missouri, making ten minutes in all, the debate is closed.

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Chairman, I was saying that the scope and purpose of the bill are extraordinary. Every sort of information and construction seems to have been employed in order to extend this committee's jurisdiction. Channels, beset with mud or rocks or rapids, are to be deepened or widened, without the ultimate possibilities of commerce. Canals are to be bought, or built, or seized, or accepted, and tunnels are to be pierced, bridges to be sprung, dikes and dams to be constructed, for the apparent relief of particular States or riparian owners. Enormous experiments, which hitherto have failed, are to be repeated with aggravated cost on the "Father of Waters," with no assurance of better benefits to navigation.

So the bill orders which is now before us. Such is this unpretentious roll, which refers to places which no gazetteer has ever mentioned; to a nomenclature which no polyglot lexicon can explain; and to regions of climatic variations with which no signal bureau corresponds. [Laughter and applause.] And though this simple pamphlet be not as elegant as those which had the imprimatur of the Elzevirs, or the binding of Baskerville; though it be not as rare as some Palimpsests of the Vatican; nor as interesting as the "Splendid Shilling," or the "Adventures of a Guinea," yet it is loaded with colossal figures which no bank ledger can exhibit; its pages glistering with treasures; and its every sentence a promise of gold. But let us not be seduced. [Applause.] Let us not yield to the temptation, lest, like the roll in the prophetic vision, it be written between the lines, "within and without, with lamentations and woe," which, if we swallow, may not be to us as to Ezekiel, as sweet as honey in the inner man.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I can not vote for this bill. I desire briefly to explain why I can not do so. The bill appropriates $15,000,000 to improve the rivers and harbors of the country. It is not the amount I object to, but the application of it. To my mind the proposed appropriation would be a waste of the public moneys. There is nothing for which I would more cheerfully vote the most liberal appropriations than for the improvement of our great rivers and important harbors. Appropriations of this character should be made for the purpose of improvement, and not for the mere purpose of expenditure; and the improvement itself should be made only where the work is national in its character and beneficial in some broad sense to the commerce of the country, and not for the purpose of serving some personal end or advancing some local interest. Take harbors like those at Boston, New York, Baltimore, Savannah, Charleston, Galveston, San Francisco, Chicago, and others, where the commerce of this and other countries is brought by land and sea and accumulates, seeking transportation abroad or to the interior, and I can see the commanding necessity for expending whatever sums are necessary for putting such harbors and the approaches to them in the highest state of improvement.

Take the Ohio, Missouri, and Mississippi Rivers, pouring their floods down through half the States of the Union, with half the very largest cities in the country upon their banks, and furnishing to half our commerce a broad natural track-way to the sea, and I can understand the importance and the wisdom of expending whatever sums may be necessary, almost without regard to limit, in improving and perfecting navigation on their waters. But those improvements ought to be made with some sort of system, with a view to completion and of achieving some positive and permanent effect.

Five hundred thousand dollars expended on the Missouri River is $500,000 thrown away. It would present the paradox of niggardly extravagance. It would result in no practical good to the commerce of the Missouri Valley. I would cheerfully vote to appropriate five millions for the improvement of that river, or whatever sum might be necessary to make it what it can be and ought to be made. And so with all these great rivers and harbors. I believe in doing the work thoroughly and in a manner commensurate with its importance. It can not all be done in a day or a year, nor all done at once. But the work should be begun and prosecuted upon some plan which contemplates permanency and completion, and the appropriations should be made and applied with that end in view. Cheap transportation is one of the crying needs of the hour. There is no disguising the fact that the profits of production are absorbed in the extortions incident to interior transportation. I believe the remedy lies, to a very great extent, in putting our great navigable rivers in such condition as to make them in fact the highways of commerce. But, sir, no good is accomplished for commerce or the people by making inadequate appropriations for these important streams such as that proposed in this bill, which gives to such rivers as the Missouri and the Ohio the pittance of $500,000, to be scattered for hundreds and thousands of miles along those streams in constructing insufficient works, temporary in character, resulting in no present good and utterly without practical value. It is simply a waste of public money. I can think of nothing that would justify it.

Unless the people interested in these great enterprises are strong enough to put men in Congress who will take high ground on this subject, and make the improvement of these waters truly a national work, to be inaugurated and carried forward on a scale equal to the demands of such a work, then I see no hope of making these waters useful to the commerce of the country. I am told it can not be done now. I am given to understand that a reasonable and sensible river and harbor appropriation bill would be an impracticable and altogether hopeless measure of legislation. I am given to understand that before Representatives in Congress will vote for a great national work of vital importance to millions of people, or will vote for any river and harbor appropriation whatever, they must have some inducement offered them in the form of an appropriation for their own immediate districts or neighborhoods.

Can it be possible, sir, that we are here to take part in a great national grab-game? Is it the lofty mission of Senators and Members in Congress to struggle with each other to see who can be most adroit and successful in getting money out of the Treasury under the vicious notion and false pretense of benefiting their respective constituencies? Mr. Chairman, that is a low and brutal estimate of public morals and public duty. How vastly better would it be to reduce taxation wherever it can be done, economize in expenditures, protect the Treasury, and employ the public revenues only in advancing those interests which are national in their character, without regard to section or whether it especially benefits your or my peculiar locality. At all events I am determined not to be a party to this game of grab. Without desiring to be offensive, for I am sure I would greatly regret it if I thought I had been, I can not characterize this proposed bill otherwise than as a monstrosity. It certainly ought to be put into the libraries of the countries, made a part of the curriculum of the schools, and respectfully recommended to the Civil Service Commission, for it embodies a great deal of information, most valuable if true, about the rivers and harbors of this country, not contained in any geography now known to mankind. The rising generation ought not to grow up, as their fathers have, in ignorance of the fact that there are some two hundred great navigable water ways in the United States and as many more important harbors along our coasts. This is certainly a marvelous country, whose wonders never cease.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be astonished if this bill commands the approval of the House, though out of the four hundred rivers, harbors, bayous, and creeks provided for I suppose a large majority of the members on this floor, in the classic language of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], "have pork in the barrel." As I have said, there are many harbors I would gladly vote needful appropriations and liberal appropriations to improve; but when I am invited to appropriate public moneys to improve everything called a harbor, whether on the lakes or the salt seas, from Pentwater, Michigan (wherever that pent-up Utica may be), by way of Moosabec Bar in Maine, Biloxi Bay in Mississippi, to Blue Buck Bar in Texas, my courage is not equal to the task. I might be induced to help out the channel between Staten Island and the New Jersey shore; but when I am asked to pour $75,000 into Maurice, Passaic, and Raritan Rivers (?) in New Jersey, I feel like the amiable gentleman from that State [Mr. MCADOO], who, a few days since, went shivering along the banks of the romping Gasconade. It would afford me genuine satisfaction to extend a helping hand to the harbor at Baltimore; but when it comes to Choptank River and Corsica Creek, I blush for "my Maryland."

I could conscientiously vote a reasonable appropriation for the James River, but when it comes to expending $8,000 for improving New River (I observe there are a great many new rivers in this bill) "between the lead mines in Wythe County and the mouth of Wilson's Creek," I must go back on the Old Dominion, sic semper tyrannus and all. I am heartily in favor of Charleston Harbor, but when it comes to Wappoo Cut and Mosquito Creek I hesitate. And so it is through all the States and Territories of the Union. I can not support such a bill. In my judgment, the best and wisest thing to do is to reject such legislation. In the way of practical results this immense expenditure would accomplish substantially nothing, so far as benefiting the general commerce of this country is concerned, but would be extravagant, wasteful, and demoralizing. I shall vote against it; I hope it will be defeated; and I shall wait impatiently for a better day for better results.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves that the committee rise and report the bill back with the amendments and with a favorable recommendation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVERHART] moves to amend that motion by striking out the word "favorable" and inserting the word "adverse."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HEPBURN. I presume that is not intended to cut off the amendments on certain questions which it was understood should be submitted for a vote in the House.

Mr. WILLIS. Not at all.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriation for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. WILLIS. There are two or three verbal amendments which the committee are willing should be submitted. There is also an amendment at line 685, under the head of "Tombigbee River," which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] kindly refrained from offering. It is an amendment which the committee do not assent to, but I agreed to a vote in the House, inasmuch as the gentleman did not press it in the committee.

The SPEAKER. Unless by unanimous consent, the question must first be put on the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection to the amendments indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky being offered and considered pending?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was also understood that the amendment with reference to the Mississippi River Commission should be considered as pending.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; and the amendments of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment which has just been sent to the desk.

Mr. NEECE. I desire also to have an amendment considered pending.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. NEECE] was absent enrolling bills and I consented to admit his amendment for a vote, but the committee do not agree to it.

The Clerk read the following proposed amendments:

By Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi:
In line 685, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$40,000."
In line 687, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$25,000."
In line 687 insert "and $5,000 to be expended between Fulton and Walker's bridge."

Mr. WILLIS. Those are the amendments offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], to which the committee do not agree.

By Mr. HUDD:
In line 306, amend by inserting after the word "wharfage" the words "over the Government piers;" so that it will read:
"But no part of said sum is to be expended until the wharfage over the Government piers at that port shall be made free."
By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas:
Amend lines 782 and 783, section 1, by striking out the words "Fort Gibson" and inserting the words "Little Rock, Ark.;" and after the word "Wichita" add the word "Kansas;" so that it will read:
"Shall be used to complete the survey of the Arkansas River between Little Rock, Ark., and Wichita, Kans."
By Mr. DUNHAM:
After line 34, section 13, insert: "Calumet River, from the forks of the river near its entrance into Lake Calumet to Riversdale."
Also insert: "Calumet River, from Riversdale to Blue Island."
Also insert: "Mississippi River at Rush Island Bend and Ivy Landing, with a view to confining and deepening the channel."
By Mr. NEECE:
Add at the end of line 1101 the following: "The sum of $25,000 shall be expended in strengthening and repairing the levees on the east side of the Mississippi River, between Warsaw and Quincy, Ill."

Mr. WILLIS. It was agreed to have a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa to the paragraph in relation to the Mississippi improvement, and also on one proposed by the same gentleman to strike out the item relating to Galveston Harbor, and also on one proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] with reference to the Mississippi River improvement.

The Clerk read the amendments indicated, as follows:

By Mr. HEPBURN:
On page 9, strike out lines 205 and 206, as follows:
"Improvement of entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas: Continuing improvement, $400,000."
In lines 1122 and 1123, strike out the words "in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission" and insert "without intervention of the Mississippi River Commission."

By Mr. HOLMAN:
Insert after the word "commission," in line 1123, the following:
"Provided, That the money appropriated by this act for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, except so much thereof as it shall be necessary to expend in preventing the works in progress on other portions of the river from waste and injury, shall be expended in the continuation and completion of the works on the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches of the river, now in progress of improvement, as established by the Mississippi River Commission, to the end that the proposed improvement of said two reaches of the river on which the works are in progress shall be completed at an early day, and the plan of said commission for the improvement of the navigation of the river fully tested."

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the chairman of the committee will allow me to state in a few simple words the grounds on which I oppose the amendment in reference to the Muskingum River.

Mr. WILLIS. I respectfully ask my colleague not to insist upon that. The question was fully debated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPOONER. At what stage will the motion to recommit with instructions be in order?

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House prescribe that a motion to recommit either with or without instructions may be made when the question is on the final passage of the bill, even although the previous question has been ordered. At all times when a bill is under consideration and the previous question has not been demanded or ordered, such a motion is in order under the practice of the House and general parliamentary law.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. Will it be in order after the amendments are disposed of to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just stated it is in order at any time when a bill is under consideration and the previous question is not asked or pending to move to recommit the bill with or without instructions, and under a special rule of the House it is in order to make that motion even when the previous question is pending on the final passage of the bill.

Unless a separate vote is demanded on any of the amendments the Chair will put the question on the amendments in gross.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall ask for separate votes on the amendments in relation to the Muskingum River, the Monongahela River, and the Green and Barren Rivers of Kentucky.

Mr. BAYNE. I demand a separate vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in relation to the Monongahela, as amended by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I was under the impression that that amendment had been voted down.

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment offered by myself and the one offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] were rejected on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON].

The SPEAKER. If there be no further call for separate votes, the Chair will put the question to the House upon all the amendments except those indicated to be voted on separately.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand the Chair to refer to the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole, not to those offered here this morning.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, except those upon which separate votes are to be taken.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 35 of the bill strike out from line 835 to line 855, inclusive, and insert:
"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate for the purchase of the works of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company, situated on the Green and Barren Rivers, in the State of Kentucky, and the works of the Monongahela Navigation Company, situated on the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania; and in order to ascertain the value of said works the Secretary of War shall appoint a commission of three competent engineers from the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, who in each case shall value and appraise the same and report to the Secretary of War, who shall report to Congress at its next succeeding session; and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purposes of this provision: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as committing Congress to the purchase of said works."

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment, and the Speaker stated that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 26.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 124, noes 42.

Mr. NEECE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and 23 members voted in the affirmative.

Mr. STORM. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered. So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 864, 865, 866, and 867 as follows:
"Subject to the conditions in the act of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio which took effect on the 2d day of May, 1885."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, when I asked for a separate vote on the Muskingum River amendment I was under the impression that this was the one. I find it is not. It was not my purpose to have a separate vote on this.

The SPEAKER. A vote must be had on it now, at any rate, because it was excluded from those voted upon in gross.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is another amendment relating to the Muskingum River improvement on which a separate vote is to be taken, and I wish to vote against it.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 887 insert the following:
"Provided, That the custody and ownership of said Muskingum River improvement shall be vested in the United States without condition; and the foregoing provision shall not take effect until the State of Ohio shall duly consent to this provision."

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 45.

Mr. REAGAN. No quorum has voted. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] makes the point that no quorum has voted, and asks that the amendment be again read. If there be no objection, the clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 70.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for a quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the first amendment proposed to-day by gentlemen on the floor. Unless a separate vote is demanded upon some of the amendments offered this morning the vote will be taken in gross.

Mr. WILLIS. I will ask a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. NEECE] and on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] in relation to the Tombigbee River.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask a separate vote on my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask a separate vote on the amendment in relation to the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman refer to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I refer to the one offered by myself.

The SPEAKER. The question then is on agreeing to the other amendments which have been read, excluding those upon which separate votes are demanded.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, is the amendment in regard to the appropriation for the harbor of Galveston pending?

The SPEAKER. It is. There is a motion pending to strike out the lines making the appropriation. Does the gentleman desire a separate vote upon that?

Mr. REAGAN. I do.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to all the amendments excepting those on which separate votes have been demanded.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the first amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The following amendment (offered by Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi) was read:

In line 685, strike out "twenty" and insert "forty;" in line 687 strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five;" after line 687 insert "and $5,000 to be expended between Fulton and Walker's Bridge;" so that the paragraph will read:

"Improving Tombigbee River, Alabama and Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $45,000; to be expended below Vienna, $15,000; and between Vienna and Fulton, $25,000; and $5,000 to be expended between Fulton and Walker's bridge."

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I desire to make a statement in regard to this amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I am not going to debate it.

The SPEAKER. But the previous question has been ordered by the House, which cuts off everything in the nature of debate except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I was about to ask unanimous consent; but before doing so I desire to state the circumstances of the case. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House upon this amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope consent will be given.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I think if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] understood the circumstances under which debate on this amendment was cut off he would not object to my making a few remarks upon the proposition at this time.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friend from Wisconsin will, as a matter of fair play, allow the gentleman from Mississippi to be heard.

Mr. BRAGG. If we are to allow debate in this way I do not know when we can get through the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. This section was passed with the consent, very kindly given, of the gentleman from Mississippi——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 68, noes 71.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I call for tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 76.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] insist further upon the point that no quorum voted?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I desire unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the remarks I would have made on this subject, and which I have no doubt would have been convincing to the House; and I also ask leave to insert "applause" at appropriate places. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks on this subject. If there be no objection that leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the next amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The following amendment (offered by Mr. HOLMAN) was read:

After the word "commission," in line 1123, insert the following:

"Provided, That the money appropriated by this act for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, except so much thereof as it shall be necessary to expend in preventing the works in progress on other portions of the river from waste and injury, shall be expended in the continuation and completion of the works on the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches of the river, now in progress of improvement as established by the Mississippi River Commission, to the end that the proposed improvement of said two reaches of the river on which the works are in progress shall be completed at an early day and the plan of said commission for the improvement of the navigation of the river fully tested."

The SPEAKER (having put the question). In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was agreed in Committee of the Whole that a yea-and-nay vote should be taken on this proposition.

Mr. KING. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Of course that agreement does not bind the House. If the gentleman demands the yeas and nays the Chair will put the question on ordering them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands the yeas and nays on this amendment, and states that there was an angreement in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that the yeas and nays should be taken.

Mr. KING. There was no such agreement.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays they were ordered, 48 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 112, not voting 76; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WILLIS moved by unanimous consent the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. KING objected.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. THOMPSON, on all political questions; also on the river and harbor bill. If present, Mr. THOMPSON would vote for the bill and Mr. ANDERSON against it.

Mr. KLEINER with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, upon all political questions for this day. If present, Mr. KLEINER would vote for the river and harbor bill and Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, would vote against it.

Mr. FREDERICK with Mr. DAVIS, on all political questions for this day. If present, Mr. FREDERICK would vote "no" on the river and harbor bill and Mr. DAVIS would vote "ay."

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. ARNOT on the river and harbor bill. If present Mr. MITCHELL would vote for the bill and Mr. ARNOT against it.

Until further notice:

Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. CASWELL.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska.

Mr. WISE with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. PERRY with Mr. CANNON.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the following amendment adopted on motion of Mr. NEECE:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 1101 the following:

"The sum of $25,000 shall be expended in strengthening and repairing the levees on the east side of the Mississippi River between Warsaw and Quincy, Ill."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question next recurred on the following amendment adopted by the committee on motion of Mr. HEPBURN:

Strike out the following:

"Improvement of entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas: Continuing improvement, $400,000."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question next recurred on the following amendment adopted by the committee on motion of Mr. HEPBURN:

Strike out, in lines 1122 and 1123, these words: "In accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission," and in lieu thereof insert "without the intervention of the Mississippi River Commission."

Mr. HEPBURN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 127, nays 107, not voting 88; as follows:

Davis,	Laird,	Snyder,	Woodburn.

So the amendment was adopted.

On motion of Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was the amendment offered by Mr. HEPBURN, to add at the end of line 1023 the words "without the intervention of the Missouri River Commission."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 76, noes 71.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HEPBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote just preceding the last vote taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WILLIS. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Pending that, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with instructions to report what I send to the desk as a substitute for the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $8,000,000, or so much thereof as shall be found necessary for the purposes hereinafter designated, is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in improving and continuing the improvements and repair and preservation of the harbors and navigable rivers of the United States, for the encouragement and promotion of the foreign and internal commerce of the United States; the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and on such works and to such extent as he may designate, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that amendable?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for the instructions just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To recommit the bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with instructions to report as a substitute therefor a bill appropriating the sum of $10,176,920, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for such improvements of rivers and harbors and for the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of such public works of river and harbor improvement as he may determine to be for the benefit of existing commerce; for gauging the waters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries and the waters of the Columbia River, Oregon, as he may deem desirable; for the examination and survey of such rivers and harbors as he may direct, and for contingent and incidental expenses in and connected therewith, providing, however, that no portion of the sum so appropriated shall be expended upon any work or project not recommended by the Chief of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill and on the proposed instructions.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will not do that now, as I desire to recommit the bill with further instructions. Is another amendment now in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the previous question upon the passage of the bill and upon the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Indiana and the amendment thereto of the gentleman from Rhode Island, which has just been read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to move that it be recommited to the committee with directions to report a bill appropriating ten millions of dollars.

The SPEAKER. Unless the previous question is withdrawn the Chair can not entertain the motion.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island is the amount of the estimates of the Department.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment proposed as a substitute by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

The question recurred upon the motion to recommit with instructions to prepare a substitute for the bill, proposed by Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. DUNN. Upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELY. I ask to have the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Indiana again read.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, upon which the yeas and nays are ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 86, nays 157, not voting 79; as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question now is on ordering the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 103, not voting 76; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My colleague, Mr. CASWELL, is absent on leave on account of the sickness of his wife, and he has desired me to state that if present he would vote against the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to state that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] is absent. If present, he would unquestionably have voted ay.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WILLIS. On behalf of myself and my colleagues on the committee I desire to express to the House our thanks for the kind consideration we have received personally during the consideration of this bill. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALDWELL. I call up the special order for to-day, the electoral count bill, and call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CALDWELL. I hope the gentleman will not press that motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk commenced to read the title.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CALDWELL. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw that motion.

Mr. DUNHAM. We were here the whole of last night, and should adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 90, noes 44.

Mr. CALDWELL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 36 members voting therefor—more than one-fifth of a quorum.

The Speaker appointed as tellers Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. DUNHAM.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 897) for the relief of the heirs at law of Andrew F. McMillan, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 1027) for the extension and repair of the public building at Belfast, Me.;

A bill (H. R. 1464) for the relief of David Webster;

A bill (H. R. 2309) to give the assent of Congress for the construction of a bridge by the Nashville, Jackson and Memphis Railroad Company over the Tennessee River;

A bill (H. R. 3519) authorizing the Interstate Rapid-Transit Railway Company to build a bridge across the Kansas River;

A bill (H. R. 5677) to authorize the construction of a pile and ponton railway and wagon bridge across the Mississippi River from the city of Red Wing, Minn., to the opposite shore in the State of Wisconsin;

A bill (H. R. 5786) granting to the Gainesville and Chickasaw Bridge Company the consent of the United States to construct and maintain a bridge over Red River at or near Brown's Ferry, in Cook County, Texas; and

A bill (H. R. 7646) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge by the Dakota Central Railway Company across the Missouri River at Pierre, Dak.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1894) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon," approved January 31, 1885; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

REPRINTING BILLS AND REPORTS.

On motion of Mr. HATCH, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture, the following bills and reports were ordered to be reprinted for the use of the House:

The bill H. R. 8328; report No. 2028.

The bill H. R. 7208; report No. 1234.

The bill H. R. 2933; report No. 848.

The bill H. R. 5191; report No. 203.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNHAM. I withdraw temporarily the motion to adjourn to allow the bill called up by the gentleman from Tennessee to be read.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL] has called up the special order for to-day, but the order states that it shall not interfere with general appropriation bills.

Mr. BRAGG. I only wish to get precedence for appropriation bills.

Mr. DUNHAM. I stated that I only withdrew the motion to adjourn to allow the bill called up by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL] to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdrew his motion to adjourn. He could not withdraw it conditionally. He has a right, however, to renew it.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask the Chair if a motion to adjourn is in order now?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SOWDEN. I make that motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 43.

Mr. CALDWELL. I call for tellers; but in the first place I desire to ask a parliamentary question. Is the bill I have called up pending?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The reading of the title of a bill, or even the reading of the bill itself, would not place it under consideration, because after the reading of it the question of consideration may be raised.

Mr. EDEN. As I understand this is a special order not to interfere with appropriation bills and certain other measures, and to continue from day to day until finished.

The SPEAKER. It is a continuing order for days not assigned to other business.

Mr. EDEN. When such a day is reached the bill will come up and occupy the same position as it does now?

The SPEAKER. Exactly the same as to-day.

Mr. CALDWELL. Upon that statement by the Chair I withdraw the call for tellers.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced, and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOSEPH: Of citizens of Las Vegas, N. Mex.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE: Of citizens of Grant and Dane Counties, Wisconsin.

By Mr. WHITING: Of citizens of Hampshire County, Massachusetts.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 7, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LAND GRANT IN OREGON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1894) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon," approved January 31, 1885; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BARRY, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROMEIS, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HIESTAND, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, for fifteen days, on account of important business.

RIGHT OF WAY OVER ARSENAL GROUNDS.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 1105, and that the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company is hereby authorized to construct its railroad across the grounds of the United States forming a part of the grounds of the arsenal at Bridesburg, in Philadelphia County, in the State of Pennsylvania; and for that purpose said company is hereby granted a width of 30 feet across said grounds for its right of way through the grounds aforesaid: Provided, That the location of said road through said grounds shall be outside of the present inclosing wall of said arsenal on the Delaware River; and the railroad shall be provided with a draw-bridge of sufficient size on the creek, and facilities for crossing said railroad to wharves, &c., all of which shall be constructed to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the United States shall have, free of charge, the right to connect with said railroad any tracks laid within the arsenal grounds for Government uses: And provided further, That when said right of way shall cease to be used for the purpose aforesaid the same shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the right to repeal, after, or amend this act is reserved to Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there is any information from the War Department as to the propriety of granting this right of way?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. There was a bill originally introduced in this House for this object, which was referred to the War Department, and the Department sent back a substitute, which is the bill now before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, but I think I had better have the report read.

The SPEAKER. That will be done if the bill is considered.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, we may dispense with the reading of the report if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] will made a brief explanation. There is one point upon which I desire information, and that is the distance that the track will be from the arsenal, my object being to ascertain whether there will be any danger that the sparks from the locomotive might explode the magazine.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. The track would be entirely outside the arsenal grounds.

Mr. BEACH. At what distance?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. The report will show, and there is a letter from the commandant of the arsenal which explains the matter. The track is entirely outside. The bill meets with the approbation of the Secretary of War and of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1105) granting the right of way to the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company through the arsenal grounds at Bridesburg, Philadelphia, Pa., having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

In conformity with the general custom of your committee, they referred this bill to the Secretary of War for his opinion as to the propriety of its passage, and whether it would in any way interfere with the interests of the Government by granting the right of way asked for, and received the following reply:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON CITY,
February 11, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, inclosing S. 1105, "granting the right of way to the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company through the arsenal grounds at Bridesburg, Philadelphia, Pa.," and inviting the opinion of this Department as to the propriety of its passage.

In reply I have the honor to inclose a copy of a report, dated the 5th instant, together with an amended bill, from the Chief of Ordnance, whose views are concurred in.

The papers accompanying your letter are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. D. CAMERON,
Of Committee on Military Affairs, U. S. Senate.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to return the letters of Hon. DANIEL ERMENTROUT, of the Committee on Military Affairs, dated 18th and 23d ultimo and 4th instant, inclosing H. R. 2107, a proposed bill in lieu thereof, and H. R. 4243, granting the right of way through the arsenal grounds at Bridesburg, Pa., to the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company, and invite attention to the inclosed report thereon of the commanding officer of Frankford Arsenal, dated 28th ultimo.

I think that the bill H. R. 4243 is incomplete in its present shape, and inclose an amended copy thereof, which will, I think, better protect the interests of the United States while granting the privilege sought by the railroad company.

The provision of the draw-bridge over the creek is necessary to preserve its navigation and enable vessels to reach the arsenal wharf on the creek, so also is the provision for crossing the proposed track to the Delaware River to meet prospective wants of the arsenal.

It will be seen that my amended bill omits the provision for assessing and collecting damages for right of way and occupation. I deem it best to retain the possession of the property in the United States, with the right to amend or repeal this act at the pleasure of Congress, as has been done in similar cases before.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

FRANKFORD ARSENAL, PENNSYLVANIA, January 28, 1886.

Respectfully returned to the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

An investigation of the proposed granting of the right of way for a railroad projected under the auspices of the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company has been made by me, necessarily confined, however, to local issues, as far as the Government of the United States is concerned at this locality, and to general bearings on the subject of the results of locating a proposed road passing through Government grounds, as affording additional facilities to those now existing for connecting our lands with the main trunk lines of the United States.

The main local point for my consideration is, can any special part of the grounds be made available for this purpose without seriously interfering with the manufacturing and other interests at this point now existing or prospective, and, if so, what part of the grounds are so available?

The solution of this question is facilitated by the facts that, from competent authority, I have learned that a line crossing our front on the Delaware River at the water's edge, eastward of our wrought-iron target and entirely off the solid land belonging to the United States, would best subserve the interests of the proposed road, and that it would best conserve the interests of the United States if so located.

Our 500-yard range will be conserved, and I see no other question of local importance which needs discussion as an objection.

A recent survey made under my direction shows that fully 30 feet of solid ground of the arsenal reservation lies eastward on the Delaware front, and beyond and outside of our target range.

The height and other dimensions of the present wrought-iron butt are established as ample protection to the navigation of the Delaware River without any additional precautions whatsoever, and additional transit of the rolling-stock of the proposed road can not, in my opinion, materially require any further security.

I therefore see no good reasons to object, so far as the interests of the United States are concerned, to a railroad using our riparian rights to the extent of 30 feet in width on the Delaware front, confined, however, strictly to the position that I have above pointed out. This grant, however, should not abridge or interfere in any serious manner with our riparian rights on the Delaware River or the Frankford Creek, and should leave intact or restore the solidity of our river and creek embankments, and secure against heavy storms or other providential causes our meadows and adjoining lands. Therefore rights of constructing a wharf or wharves on the Delaware, to be approached by roads from our grounds crossing the track, should be reserved, and free access to the Frankford Creek and wharves along the same by draw-bridge be conserved. The necessary isolation of our grounds by walls, gateways, or otherwise, to cut them off from the road as a public highway, should be provided, and all reasonable [precautions] incident to the road crossing behind our butt should be taken by the company, which should, if needed, provide flagmen or other necessary safeguards for this purpose.

The United States in the ordinary use of its range, as above stated, now affords all precaution against chances of accident, and judging from our entire freedom so far from the same, are sufficient. These risks would not be sensibly increased by the construction and use of the proposed road with the additional minor safeguards pointed out above.

No sidings for standing cars should be constructed on the Government grounds behind the target, as a matter of additional precaution.

In reference to the general aspects of the case as affecting the United States' interests by connecting these grounds more completely than at present with the trunk lines of the country, I have to say it can not but be beneficial. Our eastern embankments can afford beds for railways entering our grounds. In the event of other uses than at present of this arsenal, store-houses can be erected near the proposed line, and the fact that this reservation in its location and the peculiar fitness of its grounds for the necessary buildings is very well adapted for a large Government manufacturing establishment is an additional reason for even at present extending our transportation facilities.

The question of the mode of the determination of the damage or benefit which may accrue to the United States by the construction and use of the road through its grounds is, of course, not regarded by me as in my province to discuss. These features of the bill, being of a general character, can better be passed upon by higher authority.

S. CRISPIN,
Colonel of Ordnance, Commanding.

From the above it will be seen that the Department is in favor of the passage of the bill with certain modifications, which the committee approve. It appears that the proposed location does not interfere with any of the buildings in the arsenal grounds, and that it lies to the east, on the river side, of the butts that are used for rifle practice, so that it in no way impairs the usefulness of these grounds. Another important consideration in favor of the passage of the bill is that if it becomes a law there will no longer be any necessity for the hauling of arms and ammunition by wagon to and from the station of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company on the Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad, which would save a great deal of expense to the Government, besides avoiding the danger necessarily consequent upon loading and reloading such supplies. Then, again, when troubles occur, such as the riots of 1877, when it was absolutely necessary to move large quantities of arms and munitions to different parts of the country, it was almost impossible to do this with the requisite promptness, because there was no direct railroad connection with the arsenal, and the fact that these munitions of war had to be hauled from the arsenal grounds to the railroad gave opportunities to the rioters who were making the trouble at that time to intercept them and prevent their reaching their destination.

In view of these facts, which are borne out by the letter of General Crispin, above quoted, your committee respectfully report the bill back with an amendment, being a substitute suggested by General Benét, and, as amended, recommend its passage.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, which bill is under consideration, the Senate or the House bill?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Senate bill No. 1105, which is identical with House bill No. 7885. Both bills have been reported favorably by the House Military Committee.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I have not had time in the brief period occupied by the reading of the report to notice whether all of the conditions and reservations recommended by the commanding officer at the arsenal have been provided for in this bill, but it strikes me that there is one which I fail to find in the bill, namely, the one in regard to the protection of the riparian rights of the Government.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] I desire to say that the bill which is now before the House is the one which was forwarded to the committee by the War Department, and is a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. BEACH. If that is the case, I suppose it is all right.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. That is a fact, and the same bill identically as passed the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it does not appear yet which bill is pending before the House.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. It is the Senate bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then my friend must admit that the Senate bill by its terms provides no safeguards whatever. I understand from the reading of the report that it was not deemed desirable or necessary that the Government should insist upon the assessment and payment of damages, but I understand also that other safeguards than those contained in this bill were required.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has read only the original Senate print of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Probably. I hope the bill will be read again.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the bill will be again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. While the bill as just read is somewhat better than the original Senate bill, yet the terms used are very unsatisfactory. For one, I attach no practical importance whatever to the clause reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act. All experience demonstrates that when a grant of this kind is made it is for all practical purposes a permanent grant. Whatever may be the propriety of granting the right of way in this particular case, I regret very much to see Congress conferring upon a great corporate interest, without any compensation whatever, rights which would not be granted to a small and humble interest.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. What amendment does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the right of way should not be granted except upon the condition that whatever damages may be found to accrue to the United States by reason of the grant of this right of way shall be assessed by officers of the Government to be designated by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I will accept an amendment of that kind; I have no objection to it whatever.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will prepare his amendment and send it up.

Mr. STEELE. I presume a clause of that kind was intended to be in the bill at any rate.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. There is no objection to such an amendment. It was not thought that any damage would accrue to the Government by running this railroad where it is proposed to locate it, because the land is entirely valueless.

Mr. STEELE. I suggest that the gentleman from Indiana incorporate in his amendment a provision against this railroad company having the exclusive right as against any other railroad company.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I do not think there is any danger that any other railroad company will want to locate its tracks in that vicinity; but if the absence of such a provision is an insuperable objection to the passage of the bill, an amendment of that kind can also be inserted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by inserting after the first section the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That before this act shall take effect the Secretary of War shall cause to be assessed the damages which may accrue to the United States, if any, by the grant of this right of way, by three officers of the Army, and the amount of the award paid into the Treasury.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. That is all right.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ERMENTROUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, House bill No. 7885, identical in terms with the bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

ENOLS LOYD.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3318) for the relief of Enols Loyd, and that the bill be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Enols Loyd the pay of a wagoner of artillery from the 10th day of May, 1863, to the 1st day of September, 1864, on account of services rendered in that capacity in Battery G, First Michigan Light Artillery Volunteers.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HERBERT. I rise to a matter of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to correct the RECORD. In the RECORD of May 6, on page 4194, I find the following:

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. HERBERT. I am instructed by the Joint Commission on the Signal Service, Geological Survey, &c., to report as a substitute for the bill H. R. 8320, recently reported, a bill restricting the work and publications of the Geological Survey, and for other purposes.

So far the RECORD is correct. Then it goes on.

This proposed substitute is accompanied with a written report giving the reasons in favor of the measure.

What I supposed I did say, and what I meant to say, was "giving my, instead of the, reasons in favor of the measure." I wish the RECORD to be perfectly accurate in this matter. The commission instructed me to report the bill, but the report I made will show on its face that I did not mean to say the commission had agreed with me in the reasons for the bill. I desire to go on record simply as saying that the members of the commission are agreed on the bill. In my report I give reasons which induced me to support it. Senator MORGAN concurred with me in those reasons. As to what the other members of the commission understand to be the scope of the bill and as to the reasons for which they concur in it, I mean to leave them to speak for themselves.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, the regular order is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

SUSAN SMITH.

Mr. WINANS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4552) for the relief of Susan Smith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Butler, formerly captain of Company F, Thirty-second New York Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY F. BLAKE.

Mr. PINDAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1520) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Blake; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH M. CARROLL.

Mr. PINDAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported a bill (H. R. 8602) granting a pension to Sarah M. Carroll; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HARVEY COBURN.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5091) to restore the name of Harvey Coburn to the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CYRUS DUBBS.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7407) granting a pension to Cyrus Dubbs, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARTHA M'ILWAIN.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7162) granting a pension to Martha McIlwain; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CECILIA C. M'KENNA.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7509) granting a pension to Cecilia C. McKenna; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD CORNING.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1666) granting a pension to Edward Corning; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JANE CARR.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1431) granting a pension to Jane Carr; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 5422) granting arrears of pension to Ann J. Williams;

A bill (H. R. 6565) granting a pension to Sarah L. Wetter;

A bill (H. R. 6890) granting a pension to Amanda F. Wilson;

A bill (H. R. 2202) granting arrears of pension to Samuel B. Stewart; and

A. bill (H. R. 5163) granting a pension to Katesbury R. Warrington.

MRS. ANNIE C. OWEN.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1850) granting a pension to Mrs. Annie C. Owen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN S. BRIDGES.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1169) granting a pension to John S. Bridges; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. HAYNES, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration the bill (S. 2095) granting an increase of Pension to Mary B. Hook; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

KENNEDY G. BILLINGS.

Mr. LANDES, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2242) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Kennedy G. Billings; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS C. DICKEY.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7990) for the relief of Thomas C. Dickey; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. HENRY RIVES.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2951) for the relief of J. Henry Rives; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DAVID H. HILDEBRAND.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 8603) for the relief of David H. Hildebrand; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES TUCKER.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on Claims, also reported a bill (H. R. 8604) for the relief of James Tucker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMERICUS V. WARR, ADMINISTRATOR.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported a bill (H. R. 8605) for the relief of Americus V. Warr, administrator of Nicholas H. Isbell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LUCIEN GOYEAUX.

Mr. LYMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 990) for the relief of Lucien Goyeaux; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH DIEHL.

Mr. LYMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported a bill (H. R. 8606) for the relief of Joseph Diehl, of Moniteau County, Mo.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANDREW I. DUNCAN.

Mr. LYMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5780) for the relief of the estate of Andrew I. Duncan, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES F. BOWERS.

Mr. LYMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with favorable recommendations the bill (S. 224) for the relief of Charles F. Bowers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM ERVIN.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (S. 542) for the relief of William Ervin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INTRODUCTION OF DISEASED CATTLE, NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. SYMES, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Territories, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 2418, a bill (H. R. 8607) to disapprove certain portions of chapter 49 of the acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of diseased cattle into the Territory of New Mexico," approved March 19, 1884; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SYMES, from the Committee on the Territories, by unanimous consent, also reported, as a substitute for H. R. 4761, a bill (H. R. 8608) to disapprove certain portions of No. 35 of the acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Arizona, entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of diseased cattle into the Territory of Arizona," approved March 2, 1885; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bills Nos. 2418 and 4761 were ordered to be laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of business upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to antagonize that motion, and, if it be voted down, I will move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw the motion I have made for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Wisconsin to submit a motion to dispense with private business to-day, with the understanding that I will ask a night next week for the consideration of private business in lieu of to-day in case it shall be dispensed with.

Several MEMBERS. No more night sessions.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, is it not in order first to dispose of the bills already reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. They stand as unfinished business in the class of business to which they belong; that is, when the House comes to consider reports from the Committee of the Whole they will come up first for consideration.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It is impossible to ascertain what the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin is, owing to the confusion.

Mr. BRAGG. I now move to dispense with private business for to-day.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. For what purpose?

Mr. BRAGG. For the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to ask, if that motion shall be sustained by the House, whether it will do away with the session to-night.

The SPEAKER. It does not affect the evening session, which is held under a special order of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he purposes taking up the bill that created so much trouble here a day or two since.

Mr. BRAGG. I am sorry the gentleman from Illinois did not hear my statement and motion.

Mr. DUNHAM. I could not hear the gentleman. It is a great distance across this Hall, I will inform my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. BRAGG. I stated that my purpose was to call up for consideration to-day the Military Academy appropriation bill, if the motion to dispense with private business shall prevail.

Mr. FELTON. If I may be permitted, I desire to protest against the taking up of the short time that the Government has allowed—one day only in a week—to provide for the payment of its honest debts.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BRAGG to dispense with private business, there were—ayes 48, noes 69.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 107, not voting 116; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. DORSEY, on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. LITTLE, on the 7th and 8th of May.

Until further notice:

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. FISHER with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. COLE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. FORAN with Mr. SCRANTON.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. HIESTAND.

Mr. COX with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. HOPKINS.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. RANNEY.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. THOMPSON.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to give notice that I shall call up the Military Academy appropriation bill to-morrow.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 19.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BLAND, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 131, noes 32.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Private Calendar, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4840) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. HALSELL. Mr. Chairman, there are three other bills upon the Calendar similar in character to this, and as the committee expect to pass a general bill which will cover all these cases we do not desire to take up this bill now. I therefore ask that they be laid aside informally without losing their places on the Calendar. We hope to have the general bill considered next Tuesday.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HALSELL]?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I object. I do not object to the bills being laid aside, but I object to their being laid aside without losing their places on the Calendar.

Mr. HALSELL. I would state to my friend that the Committee on Private Land Claims have a special order for Tuesday next, and I wish to pass over these bills now in order to save time, hoping that we shall then pass a general bill which will cover all these cases. That course will save a great deal of time, because the reports are very voluminous in each one of these cases.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, if there is no business before the committee I move that it do now rise.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HALSELL].

Mr. BRAGG. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HALSELL] object to the present consideration of the first of these bills? If so, the committee will rise and report that fact to the House.

Mr. HALSELL. Yes, sir; to that and the three following bills of a similar character.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee must rise and report to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, from the Committee of the Whole House, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4840) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico and three other bills of like character, to the consideration of which objection had been made, and had directed him to report the fact to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4840) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Objection having been made to passing over this bill in Committee of the Whole, the question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar to pass over the bill?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 218) to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Objection having been made to passing over this bill in the Committee of the Whole, the question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole House to pass over this bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, if this is decided in the affirmative, will the bill lose its place upon the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It will remain upon the Calendar in the place it now occupies.

It was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3216) to confirm the title to that certain land grant, Tres Alamos, in Arizona Territory.

The SPEAKER. Objection having been made to passing over this bill in Committee of the Whole, the question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar to pass over this bill?

It was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3235) to confirm title to certain private land grants in Arizona Territory.

The SPEAKER. Objection having been made to passing over the bill in Committee of the Whole, the question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar to pass over this bill?

It was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole will now resume its session, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] will take the chair.

HENRY GEE.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 248) for the relief of Henry Gee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Henry Gee, of Florida, who under the act of August 11, 1842, for his relief, made a void location, be, and in the case of his death his legal representatives are hereby, authorized to make a relocation, as provided by said act, upon any unoccupied lands subject to homestead or pre-emption entry in the State of Florida, and in making such relocation may select a quarter-section or four 40-acre continuous tracts; and he or they shall be entitled to a patent for the whole amount thereof upon paying for the excess over and above the amount authorized to be located by the said act at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the facts in this case and the necessity for this legislation are set forth in the report of the committee, and in the report of the General Land Office, which is included in the report of the committee. The necessity for the legislation seems to be that Mr. Gee, being entitled to a certain number of acres, attempted to locate them on lands which had been previously taken up, and they can not now be located in consequence of legislation whereby lands which would be otherwise covered by the warrant were appropriated to other purposes. For this reason it becomes necessary to pass this bill in order to reach the case.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the object of the provision authorizing the entry of more land than is called for by the act of 1842?

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. There is no more.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I understand the bill to provide that more may be entered by paying for it at the rate of $1.25 an acre. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the latter part of the bill be read again.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand, the act of 1842 did not authorize the entry of a quarter-section of land, but of less than a quarter-section; and this bill proposes to authorize the location of a quarter-section upon paying for the excess.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out the word "unappropriated," in line 7, and insert "unoccupied."

After the word "lands," in line 8, insert "subject to homestead or pre-emption entry."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD FENLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5200) for the relief of Edward Fenlen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Edward Fenlen the sum of $8,627.98, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims on the 27th day of April, A. D. 1885.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside, and that Senate bill No. 2136, which is identical in its provisions, be substituted.

Mr. BRAGG. Before that request is acted on let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the clerks that the Senate bill which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] indicates has been referred to the Committee on Claims or the Committee on War Claims. The Chair questions the right of the Committee of the Whole to discharge a standing committee of the House from the consideration of a bill. Such action, in the opinion of the Chair, would have to be taken by the House, not by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. It was my understanding that by unanimous consent the Senate bill might now be substituted for the House bill. If that can not be done, I will ask that we go back into the House in order that the committee now having the custody of the Senate bill may be discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Missouri that if this bill be reported favorably to the House the gentleman can then ask the House to make the substitution.

Mr. RYAN. That is the proper course.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is what I was about to suggest.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I move, then, that this bill be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I believe I asked some time ago to have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. WARNER, of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 690) for the relief of Edward Fenlon, having examined the same, respectfully report as follows:

The claimant, January 22, 1879, and the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri entered into a contract for the transportation of military supplies from Alamosa to Fort Lewis, Colo., according to the terms of said contract. This claim was before the Forty-eighth Congress (H. R. 2032), and by the committee of that Congress referred to the Court of Claims, under the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Statutes, p. 485). That court on April 27, 1885, filed its finding of facts in said claim of Edward Fenlon against the United States (No. 129, Cong. case). The findings of the Court of Claims sustain the following:

(1) That said contract between claimant and the United States contains the following provisions, to wit:

"ART. 12. That, for and in consideration of the faithful performance of the stipulations of this agreement, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, the said party of the second part shall be paid at the office of the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri, or by an officer to be by him designated for the purpose, in the legal currency of the United States, at the rate of $2.05 per 100 pounds for the whole distance from Alamosa, Colo., to Fort Lewis, Colo., which is hereby stated and agreed to be 88 miles. * * *

"Transportation will in all cases be paid according to the distance from the place of departure to the place of delivery, the distance to be ascertained and fixed by the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri, and in no case to exceed the distance by the shortest possible route." * * *

(2) That 88 miles, as the distance between Alamosa and Fort Lewis, was based upon representations of the officer of the Quartermaster's Department, who, on behalf of the United States, entered into said contract with claimant to the effect that by the middle of summer and in season for the transportation of the military supplies by the claimant the chief engineer officer would open a new road between Alamosa and Fort Lewis, the distance of which as surveyed was 88 miles; that the United States failed to open said new road for the transportation of said military supplies by the claimant.

(3) Notwithstanding the failure to open said new road, the claimant was required by the officer of the Quartermaster's Department to transport 386,157 pounds of supplies over what was known as the Conejos cut-off, the distance via which, ascertained and fixed by the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri, was 105 miles; that during the late fall and winter of 1879 and 1880 said cut-off was impracticable for the transportation of said supplies by reason of deep snow in the mountain gorges; that, while said cut-off was thus blocked by snow, the claimant was required by the officers of the Quartermaster's Department to haul 178,219½ pounds of military supplies by the then only practicable road, a distance of 234 miles, as ascertained and fixed by the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri.

(4) That on the 15th of September, 1879, the claimant notified said quartermaster, in substance, that the new road provided for in the contract had never been opened, and that he would be compelled to transport said supplies by a longer route, and that he should expect to be paid for the haul "from place of departure to place of delivery." In reference to this notification, the Quartermaster's Department, acting for the United States, agreed that claimant was entitled to be paid from place of departure to place of delivery, and sought to have him so paid; that again, on the 19th of December, 1879, the claimant notified said chief quartermaster that the ordinary road had for more than a month been rendered impracticable by reason of deep snows for transporting said military supplies, and that he had been compelled to haul the supplies more than double the distance, by the only practicable route, and requested to be paid for distance necessarily traveled; that said officer agreed that said claimant was entitled to be paid as claimed.

(5) The Court of Claims found that the amount for transporting the supplies 88 miles, at $2.05 per 100 pounds, would be as follows:

386,157 pounds 88 miles equals	$8,142 79
178,219½ pounds 88 miles equals	4,292 60
Total	12,435 39

This amount was paid to the claimant. The Court of Claims found that, if the claimant was allowed for the distance "from place of departure to place of delivery" by the nearest practicable route at the contract price of $2.05 per 100 pounds, he would have been entitled to the following:

386,157 pounds 105 miles equals	$9,647 96
Total	21,063 37

That the claimant was only allowed and paid the sum of $12,435.39, on the basis that military supplies were only transported 88 miles, thus leaving a difference of $8,627.98 between the amount paid claimant and that which would be due him if paid for the distance which the supplies were transported by the shortest practicable route, as fixed and ascertained by the chief quartermaster of the Department of Missouri.

The committee are satisfied that said amount of $8,627.98 should be paid the claimant, Edward Fenlon, and herewith submit a substitute for bill H. R. 690, the passage of which the committee recommend, and that the original bill do lie on the table.

FINDINGS OF FACT BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

[In the Court of Claims, Edward Fenlon vs. The United States, No. 129, Congressional case.]

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 27th day of April, A. D. 1885, in the cause aforesaid, the court filed findings of fact, and it was ordered that a copy duly certified be reported to the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, together with a copy of this order.

By the court.

Findings of fact filed by the court April 27, 1885.

This case, referred to the court by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, May 23, 1884, under the act of March 3, 1883, ch. 116 (22 Stat. L., 485), having been heard by the court, the Attorney-General, by his assistants, appearing for the defense and protection of the United States, as required by said act, the court, upon the evidence, finds the facts to be as follows:

Findings of fact.

1. On the 2d day of June, 1879, the claimant, Edward Fenlon, entered into a contract in writing with Col. Rufus Saxton, deputy quartermaster-general and chief quartermaster Department of the Missouri, acting on behalf of the United States, for transportation of military supplies on route 7 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; and that among the provisions of said contract are the following, to wit:

"ART. 12. That for and in consideration of the faithful performance of the stipulations of this agreement, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, the said party of the second part shall be paid at the office of the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri, or by an officer to be by him designated for the purpose, in the legal currency of the United States, at the rate of $2.05 per 100 pounds for the whole distance from Alamosa, Colo., to Fort Lewis, Colo., which is hereby stated and agreed to be 88 miles.

* * * * * * *

"Transportation will in all cases be paid according to the distance from the place of departure to the place of delivery, the distance to be ascertained and fixed by the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri, and in no case to exceed the distance of the shortest practicable route."

* * * * * * *

II. That the distance of 88 miles between Alamosa and Fort Lewis, Colo., was based upon the representation of the officer of the Quartermaster's Department, who, on behalf of the United States, entered into said contract with the claimant; that Lieutenant Ruffner, chief engineer officer, would, by the middle of the summer, and in season for the transportation provided for, open a new road between said places, the distance via which, as surveyed, was 88 miles.

III. The new road mentioned in the second finding was not opened, and was not at any time during the continuance of said contract made practicable for the transportation over it of the supplies which were transported under said contract.

IV. The claimant was required by the officer of the Quartermaster's Department, within the time covered by the contract, and when such route was practicable, to transport 386,157 pounds of supplies by a route known as the Conejos cut-off, the distance via which route was ascertained and fixed by the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri at 105 miles.

V. The value of the transportation service performed and specified in the fourth request, according to the distance from the place of departure to the place of delivery, as ascertained and fixed by the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri, at the rate of $2.05 per 100 pounds for 88 miles, is $9,647.96, and the amount actually paid the claimant for said services is $8,142.79.

VI. During the late fall and winter of 1879 and 1880 the Conejos cut-off was an impracticable route for transporting said supplies, by reason of the deep snow in the mountain gorges, and during that time the claimant was required by the officers of the Quartermaster's Department to transport 178,219½ pounds of military supplies via the route known as Ojo Caliente and Tierra Amarilla, which was the only practicable route for such transportation, the distance via which route was ascertained and fixed by the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri at 234 miles.

VII. The value of the transportation service performed and specified in the sixth finding, according to the distance from the place of departure to the place of delivery, as ascertained and fixed by the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri, at the rate of $2.05 per 100 pounds for 88 miles, is $11,415.41, and the amount actually paid the claimant for said service is $4,292.60.

VIII. On the 15th of September, 1879, the claimant notified the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri, in substance, that the new road which was to be opened for the transportation of supplies under his contract—the distance via which was stated in the contract at 88 miles—was not opened, and was not likely to be opened, in consequence of which he was compelled to transport said supplies by the old and longer route, and that he should expect to be paid according to the distance from the place of departure to the place of delivery.

IX. The officers of the Quartermaster's Department, acting for and on behalf of the United States in this transaction, in response to this notification, agreed that the claimant was entitled to be paid according to the distance from the place of departure to the place of delivery, and sought to have him so paid.

X. On the 20th of December, 1879, the claimant notified the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Missouri that the ordinary route of transportation had for more than a month been rendered impracticable, by reason of deep snows, for the transportation of supplies, and that he had been compelled to make a detour of more than double the distance, which detour was the only practicable route between the two points, and requested to be paid for the necessarily greater service, and said officers agreed that the claimant was entitled to be paid as claimed.

XI. The Second Comptroller of the Treasury refused to authorize the payment to the claimant for the supplies tranported via the Conejos cut-off, specified in the fourth request, of more than $8,142.79, and he also refused to authorize payment to the claimant for the snpplies transported via the Ojo Caliente and Tierra Amarilla route, specified in the sixth request, of more than $4,292.60.

Order of court.

APRIL 27, 1885.

Ordered, That a copy of the foregoing findings of fact, duly certified, be reported to the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, together with a copy of this order.

By the court.

A true transcript of record. Test this 9th day of January, 1886.

[SEAL.] JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If no gentleman desires to put any question about this bill or to discuss it, I renew the motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

COLUMBIA BANK, PENNSYLVANIA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2140) for the relief of the Columbia Bank in Pennsylvania.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $80,000 to the Columbia Bank, of Columbia, Pa., in full for the destruction of the bridge across the Susquehanna River, at the said town of Columbia, burned by order of the military authorities of the United States, in June, 1863, at the time of the rebel invasion of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOUND rose.

Mr. GEDDES. Is the reading of the report called for?

Mr. SPRINGER. What action does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOUND] ask in regard to this bill?

Mr. GEDDES. This bill is on the Calendar upon an adverse report from the Committee on War Claims. It was placed on the Calendar on motion of some friend of the measure—perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOUND]. I ask the gentleman whether this claim is likely to be pressed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HIESTAND] has charge of the bill.

Mr. BOUND. My colleague [Mr. HIESTAND] was suddenly called away last night, and I therefore ask that this bill be laid aside informally without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. GEDDES. Of course I am not disposed to resist that request.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection.

JOHN S. KENDRICK, EXECUTOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 818) for the relief of John S. Kendrick, executor of Amanda Goggin, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John S. Kendrick, executor of Amanda Goggin, deceased, of Pulaski County, Kentucky, the sum of $5,550, for property taken from the decedent by the Army of the United States during the late war.

The amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims was read, as follows:

In line 7, strike out "$5,550" and insert "$1,280."

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The report is very short, and I have no objection to having it read in my time.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 818) for the relief of John S. Kendrick, executor of Amanda Goggin, deceased, have given careful consideration to the same, and submit the following report:

The present claimant is John S. Kendrick, executor of Amanda Goggin, deceased. The claim is made for 2,220 cords of wood, at $2.50 per cord, $5,550. The committee find upon investigation that the claimant, Mrs. Amanda Goggin, was a loyal citizen of the State of Kentucky; that the Union Army destroyed 15,200 fence-rails belonging to her, worth $2.50 per hundred, $380, and also 1,200 cords of wood in the tree, worth in that condition 75 cents per cord, $900; making a total of $1,280.

This sum your committee think should be paid the claimant. They recommend that the bill (H. R. 818) be amended by striking out the words "five thousand five hundred and fifty," in line 7, and insert the words "twelve hundred and eighty." With this amendment they recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass. I believe the facts of the case are sufficiently stated in the report. The Committee on War Claims investigated the case very thoroughly. The claim as first presented was for compensation for this wood at the price of fence-rails. The committee did not think the Government should pay for these rails at the value of fence-rails, and therefore reduced the amount so as to make payment for the value as cord-wood or fire-wood. The committee had no question in their mind as to the loyalty of the claimant, or the fact that the rails were appropriated to the use of the United States by troops under the command of United States officers. Reducing the amount so as to make compensation at the value of fire-wood, the sum we propose shall be paid is $1,280. With this amendment, the committee recommended that the bill pass.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask whether all the wood was in the shape of fence-rails.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think all of it was in the shape of fence-rails with the exception of a small portion which was wood in the tree. Nearly all of it consisted of fence-rails.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me inquire further whether there was an order from the commander there to take this wood for army supplies?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand there was an order to take this wood for any such purpose, but it was taken at a time when the weather was extremely cold; and the proof shows the army needed it as fire-wood. It was so taken and so used by the army encamped in the vicinity. I now yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY].

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the gentleman takes his seat I desire to learn a further fact. I have understood the Committee on War Claims have reported adversely upon all the cases where property was taken except upon the lawful authority of the commander of the locality or of the post.

It seems, from the report here and from the statement of the gentleman himself, this was an unauthorized spoliation, and not the case of an ordinary taking of the supplies for the use of the Army. Now, I well remember to have introduced a bill for the relief of one of my constituents living in Sangamon County, Illinois, near a camp in the vicinity of Springfield. The soldiers went to his farm and took his corn and potatoes and other vegetables, brought them to camp, and consumed them. The Committee on War Claims reported adversely to that claim upon the ground that, while the property had been taken by the Army, yet it was not taken by authority of the commander of the post, and therefore payment should not be made.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If the gentleman will indulge me I will say that I have no doubt he is making an excellent speech, but I can not hear him even at this distance.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state again I understand this comes within the rule laid down by the Committee on War Claims, that the unauthorized taking of property in the vicinity of our armies for the purpose of immediate use, and not in response to any order of the commanding officer, for army supplies should not be paid for. In this instance fence-rails were taken and used for fire-wood. There are many cases in the vicinity of Washington where our armies encamped where farms were denuded of fences to be used as fire-wood. All such cases heretofore the Committee on War Claims has reported against upon the ground they were ordinary destruction of property in the movements of our armies. I do not see how the line, therefore, was drawn in this case, as it seems there was no legal requisition for any such fire-wood.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The case cited by the gentleman from Illinois, as I remember it, and as reported upon by the Committee on War Claims, was a case where there was mere spoliation, mere destruction of property by individuals at Springfield.

The case is very different from that. The fence-rails, in this instance, were used as fire-wood for the purpose of keeping the men from freezing. It was in the months of December and January, 1861–'62. The case stands upon a different ground in every way, and does not come within the rule referred to by the gentleman from Illinois.

I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this bill. It was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and that committee has reported unanimously in favor of it. Therefore what I have to say will be very brief.

The present claimant is John S. Kendrick, as the executor of Amanda Goggin, who was the owner of the farm near where these soldiers encamped during the war. Amanda Goggin is now dead, and Kendrick prosecutes this case as her executor.

A large number of Federal soldiers encamped there in December and January, 1861–'62, and they were compelled to take these fence-rails as fire-wood. They used 15,200 fence-rails belonging to her, as the proof shows, and also 1,280 cords of wood in the tree. The committee unanimously agree to report in favor of allowing her the sum of $1,280. I hope that amendment will be passed.

Mr. PETERS. Did Mrs. Goggin leave any heirs?

Mr. McCREARY. She has children, but, as I have already stated, this case is prosecuted by Mr. Kendrick as her executor.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the favorable consideration of any claim with some degree of reluctance, but this question of the payment of what are known as war claims is an old one, and I am only interested just now in ascertaining the authority on which the War Claims Committee persists in making these allowances or rejections. If I understand correctly the precedents which have been established by Congress, the line has been drawn between those which are to be allowed and those which are to be rejected at this point: If the property was such as belonged to a class known as quartermaster, commissary, or ordnance stores, and if it was seized by an officer having authority and actually appropriated by the Government to war uses, although a formal voucher may not have been executed by the officer, yet it has been held that the Government under such circumstances is liable, and I see no sufficient reason why it should not be.

But if the property is simply seized by the soldiers themselves; if they have gone even on a cold night to a fence and appropriated the rails and burned them for the purpose of keeping themselves warm, or if they have gone wantonly to a smoke-house and appropriated the meat to their use, or committed any other act of unwarranted appropriation, it would amount simply to a trespass; for such appropriation, although the stores might be such as are regarded as army stores, and such as might have been appropriated by an officer with authority in the regular way, yet, I say, if such appropriation is wanton and unauthorized it is a mere tresspass, for which the Government is not and ought not to be held responsible.

Why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, from the very statement of the case it must be apparent that if the Government is to be held responsible for trespasses of this character, committed even upon the property of loyal citizens, we will never be able to discharge the obligation. I remember that in 1863 John Morgan paid a complimentary visit to the State that I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor, and the pursuing Union forces appropriated the horses of our people, the hay, corn, and oats, and notwithstanding the State appointed a commission to investigate the extent of these spoiliations, notwithstanding the testimony disclosed the fact that in all instances the persons parting with their property were loyal citizens of the United States and that this property was of the kind I have mentioned, such as war property and army stores and was so appropriated, yet the Government, from 1863 down to the present time, has wholly refused to reimburse the citizens of my State; and did it—Congress has made the refusal—upon the ground that these were mere trespasses committed by the soldiers, and not seizures made by an officer in command, under authority, and appropriating the goods in the regular way to army uses.

I have said this, that we ought to understand what the rule is; that is, if we intend to have any rule upon the subject let us understand it. I will very cheerfully consent to vote to reimburse for losses of this kind to loyal citizens of any State where the property has been seized upon regularly by an officer, and where it has unquestionably been appropriated in the regular way to army uses; but I am not willing to vote to pay any one, whether in Indiana or Kentucky or in Ohio—I am not willing to pay damages that have resulted simply from a wanton spoliation by United States troops upon the property of loyal citizens of the United States.

If I apprehend aright the reading of the report in this case it is this: That an army camping in the vicinity of this claimant's, or of her late husband's, property, upon a cold night resorted to the fence-rails in an irregular way. Those of us who have been in the Army know—well, it was a regular way in one sense of the word, for the Army very regularly did this kind of thing—they appropriated the rails, and, as the report states, a large amount of cord-wood in the tree; and that to me is the strangest part of the whole transaction, for if there had been sufficient rails I doubt the fact of the depredation being committed in the timber in the tree. But, Mr. Chairman, I say it is under any circumstances a mere trespass, assuming the facts to be true as they are set forth in the report; it is a mere trespass upon the part of the troops and not a rule to guide us in the payment of such claims. But if the committee and the House afterward conclude to do this, let it be understood that this is a precedent for the payment for all property that may have been taken from loyal citizens, that might have been appropriated for army purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I do not remember during the time I have been a member of this House that a claim of this character has been passed by Congress. In fact it seems to me that this case is clearly within the rule as belonging to that class of cases that Congress has uniformly decided should not be paid. As stated by the gentleman from Indiana, who recognizes this case as coming within a class that would, if paid, cost a vast expenditure of money to meet the demand, who recognizes from the reading of the report the circumstances and conditions under which the property was taken, a portion of the Army on a cold night came near the farm of the claimant in this case, the soldiers going out and helping themselves to the rails until they were gone and then cutting down the standing timber and using the material for the purpose of making themselves comfortable. That is the state of facts set forth in the report. But that was the very process which was carried on during the war from the Potomac to Florida, and was carried on largely within the limits of the District of Columbia. Thousands of acres of land were entirely denuded of forests in the vicinity of this city; and in some parts of Virginia where I have traveled since the war there was not a fence to be found, all having been taken by one army or the other; and the number of fence-rails consumed by the armies during the period of the war would, if paid for under the provisions of this bill, aggregate what may be justly called an enormous amount of money.

I do not believe any officer of either army ever issued a requisition for the taking of fences for fire-wood. As the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] well knows that did not require a requisition. They just went out and took them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the property had been taken for the use of the Army, and vouchers been issued in the regular way, and it had been shown the Army used it for the purpose here declared, it would bring the case within the rule; but it is not within the rule, and to pass this bill, although reduced from the amount claimed, $5,000, to $1,200, would establish a precedent that would cost this country untold millions of dollars.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. If this bill should pass would it not establish the principle that wherever an army went the Government was responsible for whatever damage followed, whether the damage was from the authorized act of an officer or from the unauthorized act of a private?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is my opinion. It would set the worst precedent that could possibly be made. Therefore, although this bill comes to us with a great reduction in the amount, from $5,000 to $1,200, we should not be tempted by that even to allow this amount to be paid. It is as bad a precedent to allow $1,200 as it would be to allow a larger amount.

Mr. McCREARY. Does the gentleman from Illinois draw any distinction between wanton damage committed by soldiers of the Federal Army and the taking of fence-rails and wood for the purpose of keeping themselves warm in freezing weather?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not remember that soldiers have ever been in the habit of going out to destroy property for the amusement of the thing. Whenever they have taken property it has been to use it in the camp. So I suppose this property was taken, as other timber was taken during the war, for useful purposes. But it was an unauthorized depredation; and this comes under the class of losses resulting from the operations of war for which Congress has determined no compensation should be made. It is unfortunate for the parties involved, as for all persons found in the midst of war. But that is a misfortune Congress can not remedy. If fire comes and destroys the houses of citizens, those citizens must submit to the loss of their property. If war comes and devastates the property of a whole district, the people in the district must suffer the loss. Congress can not make compensation. If this is paid it opens the door to an enormous amount of similar cases, the end of which no one can foresee.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The simple question here is whether the principal, which is the Government in this case, shall be held responsible for the accidental or wanton trespasses of its agents on other people. We have paid heretofore all claims where they have originated by virtue of any authority of any man who represented the Government. Whenever an officer who was the exponent or representative of the power of the Government at that time gave an order to take the private property of any individual, then the Government by virtue of the exercise of that authority became responsible for the acts of its agent. But if this Government is to assume the responsibility of making itself liable for the depredations which have been committed without warrant or authority of law, I say we might as well stop speaking about the surplus in the Treasury and go to work to increase the taxation of the people of this country.

We have for twenty years refused to pay this class of claims, while we have paid all classes of claims which were justly due. And it seems to me while this is a small amount, it involves a principle which if adopted must eventuate in a very heavy draught on the resources of the country. I therefore take the liberty of calling on members of this House to consider well before they put in this entering-wedge which will result in a very heavy outlay of the taxes contributed by the people.

There can be no more reason for paying this claim than there is for paying ten thousand other claims where the soldiers of the Federal Army took property, either wantonly or to supply their needs, without authority of law. And, as I have said, if we pay this claim it will be followed by ten thousand other claims, some of smaller amount and many much larger. For this reason I trust the members of this House will reflect upon the principle and the results involved before they open up the Treasury to a class of claims which do not rest upon the law or upon any authority the Government exercised, but are simply put forward to reimburse parties for depredations committed by persons who were not representatives of the Government for the purpose of taking this property.

Mr. PETTIBONE. In the original bill of rights, drawn by George Mason and adopted in most of the State constitutions in the United States, is the principle that private property shall not be taken for public use without due compensation.

A MEMBER. It is older than that.

Mr. PETTIBONE. The gentleman says the principle is older than the bill of rights drawn by George Mason. In truth it is as old as the exercise of justice among men.

I agree with my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the Union soldiers were not accustomed to wantonly destroy property. If they destroyed property without any benefit to the United States, or if the taking of the property was not necessary then and there for their sustenance and their protection, then the Government is not called upon in justice to pay the claim.

But, sir, an army marches through the country, night comes on, it is surrounded by storm and darkness, there is no means of sending up to headquarters, which may be 5 or 10 miles off, to get an order to build a fire, but here is the fuel; the soldiers take it and make a fire; it belongs to a Union man, and he ought to be paid. He gives his allegiance to the Government, and every government of which I have ever read in the history of time has gone upon the principle that allegiance and protection go together. If the citizen or subject is loyal, then the Government is bound in equity not to take his private property for public use without paying for it. Now, what is this case? I understand the facts to be these, and I challenge the attention of the House to these facts. I understand that the Union forces during the war camped upon the land of this claimant, that she was loyal, that fuel was necessary to protect the soldiers from the inclemency of the weather. It was not cut and stacked up as cord-wood; it was in the form of rails and timber. The soldiers were encamped there four or five weeks.

I ask you gentlemen, do you suppose that in the inclemency of winter a Federal army, or any army, could remain encamped in one place without the means of cooking their food, without the means of keeping themselves warm? Why, you would have had a sick-list that would have cost you in pensions and in the resulting inefficiency of the army a hundred times what this woman's rails and timber were worth. If this property was not used for the comfort and benefit of the soldiers it ought not to be paid for. If it was used to make fires to keep them warm and to cook their food and the woman was loyal, tell me on what principle you are going to say that this claim ought not to be paid? Oh, you say, but it will open a door to fraud. Will not the House of Representatives always be equal to itself? On the one hand, it is admitted that you can not bind the next Congress. Your precedents, if they are bad, will be of no avail. Each case will be determined upon its own state of facts, and the question here now is, shall we do justice to-day on this particular occasion or shall we do injustice now lest our successors in future Congresses shall go wrong?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask the question simply for guidance in giving my vote. I do not find that the report of the Committee on War Claims contains a statement of the facts of this case like that made by the gentleman from Tennessee. The report does not even state that this fuel was used for the purposes of the Army; it says that it was "destroyed"—an unfortunate word in such a case.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I concede that; but I have asked the chairman about the proof that is behind the report. I concede that if the property was simply wantonly destroyed by the Federal soldiers we ought not to pay a cent for it.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Suppose it was destroyed in consequence of being between the two armies while they were fighting?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Oh, that is another question. Of course it should not be paid for in that case. That is one of the exigencies of war.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to suggest that the special finding of his jury is against him. They have reported that the property was "destroyed," and not used. Would it not be better to have the bill recommitted and get a proper report?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Possibly that may be so. I am not quarreling with the verbiage of the report, nor do I stand upon it, but I say that if the facts behind this report are as I understand them to be, if it is true that this woman's rails were taken as fuel to make fires to keep the Federal soldiers warm and to cook their food, gentlemen need not tell me that this county is going to the dogs if we pay this old widow the sum of $1,200.

Mr. LONG. How long were the troops encamped there?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Four or five weeks.

Mr. LONG. Don't you think it is likely that during that time the officers would have made a requisition for fuel?

Mr. PETTIBONE. No, sir; I do not think so, because I have been in the volunteer service myself, and there are many gentlemen on this floor who have had a like experience and who know that in those days we did not stop to attend to such formalities when we were scouting or looking for the enemy. We were not behind bomb-proofs up in Massachusetts or in Wisconsin. The feeling then foremost in our minds was, "We will put down this rebellion if it takes every chicken in Dixie." That is the way we felt. The general in command was not studying principally about fences, but the question was, "Where is General Lee, or General Longstreet, or General Johnston with his forces?"

Mr. O'HARA. One question: Does the gentleman propose to pay for the chickens?

Mr. PETTIBONE. No, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Why not?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Because the question of loyalty is in the way. But if they were a loyal woman's chickens, and had been made into broth to feed poor sick Union soldiers in the hospital, I would say yes. Who would say no?

But, Mr. Speaker, I have said all I wish to say, and I yield the floor.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, the point I desire to make has already been alluded to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], and possibly by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN]. That very salutary principle of the Constitution—older, indeed, than the Constitution—that private property should not be taken for public use except upon just compensation, has been invoked by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] as justifying favorable action on this bill. Now, I want to call attention to the fact that the finding made in this case, as embraced in the report of the committee, does not say that this property was ever taken and applied to any public use. The report simply states that a certain number of thousands of rails were destroyed by the Army. There is nothing in the report to indicate that those rails were ever used for any public purpose, or that their destruction might not have been accidental and not for the purposes suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee. In brief, there is nothing here to show that this property was ever taken by command of any authorized officer, or was ever used by the Army for any legitimate purpose in such a way as to fix a liability upon the Government to pay for these rails

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me—and I have watched the action of the Committee on War Claims with some interest, because I represent a section of country in which a great many of these claims have originated—that this particular claim is far outside of the most liberal line that has yet been drawn by this House or by the committees of Congress in dealing with this class of claims. As has been well said by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], if the Committee of the Whole should recommend the payment of this claim and if the House should pass the bill, we begin favorable action upon a new class of claims, a great many of which have already been rejected by the officers of the Government and by committees of Congress, and we start upon a career of expenditure involving an ultimate outlay which no man can estimate in advance. In view of the considerations already urged on this floor, and in view especially of the authentic report of this committee—so very meager as to every point upon which we should desire to have information in acting upon a claim like this, a report which in its conclusions is adverse to the precedents of this House in considering war claims—I submit that this claim should not receive the favorable action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, we have before us a report from the Committee on War Claims which states that they find the Union Army "destroyed" 15,200 fence-rails belonging to the claimant, worth $2.50 per hundred, amounting to $380, and also 1,200 cords of wood in the tree, worth in that condition 75 cents per cord, amounting to $900; making a total of $1,280. This Committee on War Claims having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and we may say of the person also, because the claimant had submitted to the jurisdiction, makes a report here in the nature of a special finding by a jury. This committee finds—we have not the evidence before us, but simply the finding—that these fence-rails and these trees were "destroyed." It seems to me that so far as our action is concerned this is conclusive. If not, why not? These rails and these trees were destroyed; that is the finding. If they were destroyed, then what is the legal conclusion? That their destruction was a part of the ravages of war. We do not know for what purpose they were destroyed. I presume these rails were taken to build breastworks, and we may presume that these trees were chopped down to make abatis for the protection of breastworks or something of that kind. If trees were "destroyed," I can not readily imagine for what other purpose they were so destroyed. According to the report they were not used; and we are to follow this report as importing verity in this case.

My eloquent and earnest friend from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE], for whose judgment as a lawyer and as a man I have very great regard, says the amount in this claim is only $1,200 at any rate, and it is a poor Union woman whom we are asked to pay. Mr. Chairman, when our American forefathers went to war against our English ancestors it was not on account of the tax of 3 cents a pound on tea, but it was for the principle that there should not be taxation without representation. So the question here is not as to the $1,200 which it is proposed to pay to this woman or her representatives. The question is whether we are to pay for the devastation of war; because, as has been said here more than once, if we enter upon the payment of claims of this class we shall need to have a larger surplus in the Treasury than we have today; we shall need much heavier taxation than is now provided for. This is simply the opening of a door; it may not be a very wide opening now, but we must remember the old fable of the camel who wanted very much to get his head within the tent. First, it was the nose that entered, next the head, then the neck, and finally the whole body; so that the occupant of the tent had to move out. And so we may apprehend it will be in this case. The opening may be small to-day, but it may become capacious enough to swallow all our treasure and leave us bankrupt. If this is the ravage of war, if this property was destroyed and not used, if these trees were cut down to give a range for artillery (and that is part of the ravage of war), it is not to be paid for. All law, modern and ancient, is against any such liability as that; and therefore so long as we stand upon this report, until we have some different report, I do not see how we can afford to pass this bill.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. If this bill shall pass and become a precedent we have twenty millions of like destruction around Gettysburg.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I see no other way but to recommit this report to see whether it is correct or not.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire here now to discuss the principles involved in this measure. It is sufficient for my purpose to say the discussion elicted by this bill develops sufficiently to my mind the general judgment of the House in regard to it, and on that account I ask and now move the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I rose to make the same motion. This report uses the language, these fence-rails and wood were destroyed. The proof shows they were taken and used by the soldiers. But I am sure I for one do not desire any precedent established here which would in any respect be injurious. When the chairman of the Committee on War Claims rose, I was about to move the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. GEDDES'S motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

FRANCIS W. HALDEMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was, the bill (H. R. 658) for the relief of Francis W. Haldeman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Francis W. Haldeman, of Avoca, State of Iowa, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200, as compensation for services performed and money expended for the benefit of the United States during the late civil war.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to hear the report of that loyal Iowan read.

The report (by Mr. LYMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred House bill 658, make the following report:

In the fall of the year 1863, Francis W. Haldeman, being then a mere lad twelve years old, too young to be enlisted and received into the military service of the United States, procured, at his own expense, a uniform, and, in the same manner, armed himself, and went with an Ohio regiment from his home in Tiffin, Ohio, to Johnson's Island, in Sandusky Bay, and was there engaged for some time in guarding prisoners. He then attached himself to the Forty-ninth Ohio Infantry, and went to Camp Dennison, near Cincinnati, Ohio, and again sought to be mustered in as a drummer, but was rejected on account of his age and size. He then attached himself to Company A, Twelfth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and all the officers of that regiment testify that he faithfully performed the duties of a cavalry soldier, as a bugler, a scout, and an enlisted man in the ranks, until the end of the year 1864. It also appears that he received such injuries to his physical health while in the line of his duty as that he has never recovered from the same. His conduct was of such a gallant nature that he has received honorable mention by name in the history of his regiment. He has never been paid one cent, because he was never mustered. The gallant and meritorious services of this brave and patriotic youth deserve recognition.

Your committee recommend that the bill pass, with the following amendment: In the sixth line strike out the words "and fifty."

Mr. LYMAN. I move that bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to say anything against so brave a boy as that; but it does seem to me a lad twelve years old, too small to be enlisted even as a drummer-boy, too young and too small for any service, the chances are those glorious achievements he performed, which made him historical in the history of his regiment, have been performed largely by the pen-and-ink brigade since the war, as well as all that species of recollection which writes up a great deal of military history and furnishes an immense amount of pension evidence and proof to support war claims; in other words, they are very likely to be creations of the imagination.

But whether this was so or not, the Government refused to take this boy into its service. They declined to have him, and on competent authority rejected him because he was unfit for service.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But they did not refuse to take his services.

Mr. BRAGG. But like a camp-follower or horse-leech he followed on, and followed on, and followed on. Why? On account of that glorious and patriotic sentiment which prevailed all over the State of Ohio.

A MEMBER. Iowa.

Mr. BRAGG. Iowa, is it? No; he went to Ohio, but he started from Iowa. He wanted to go down to guard the prisoners in Lake Erie. That boy, if I remember the report here—and that is where he got it—it was an afterthought of that glorious patriotism which filled him when he wanted to go when the Government said he should not. What has become of it? Has it oozed out like the courage of some people we have heard tell of? What was to be such a glorious record of courage and patriotic sentiment, which was to impel him to go when the Government tried to keep him from going, has now developed into a begging propensity. The gentleman from Iowa who presented his claim undoubtedly knows the boy. He undoubtedly knows the boy; he is undoubtedly a nice boy, and it occurred to him it would be a clever thing to give something to that boy. So it went. There are a thousand boys I know who would like it very much and be just as thankful. But there is no earthly ground in the world for paying this boy for anything that he did. He has got no claim upon the Government whatever; and we are in no condition now to be giving presents to boys even if they do live in Iowa or Indiana or Ohio or anywhere else where some member of the Committee on War Claims happens to live.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any reason whatever why this assault should be made upon this young man. I do know him, and he does live in the State of Iowa; but I did not know him at the time he was serving his country in the Army. It has been said by the gentleman from Wisconsin that the country refused to receive him as an enlisted man and to muster him into its service as a soldier in the Army.

It is true he was not received and mustered, because he was not within the age of enlistment; but as remarked by my colleague from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] on my left, the country did not refuse for over a year to receive his services, and the faithful service, too, which he rendered. The country did not refuse to allow him to arm and uniform himself at his own expense, and use his arms and uniform in its defense during the period of his service.

I know the young man now, while I did not know him then; and I do know that his health is broken, and if we are to believe the evidence furnished before the War Claims Committee, broken by reason of his exposure in the service. He asks at this late day for this compensation in view of the expenditures incurred by himself; and I am sorry to hear him assailed as he has been upon the floor of this House by the commander of the "Iron Brigade."

Now, I only know about this man's service from what I have seen in the record before the Committee on War Claims. I introduced this bill into the House for his relief, and estimated the service at $250, including the expenses to which he had been subjected in purchasing his arms and uniform. The committee thought that the time for which he was in the service and the probable amount of the expenditure made by him would not exceed $200, which sum, in their judgment, was sufficient compensation, and they directed that amendment to the bill. I have no objection to the amendment, but the testimony of the officers commanding that regiment is to the effect that this young man was a faithful soldier during the year or over that he was with the regiment acting in the capacity of bugler in the regiment of cavalry to which he was attached, and also acting as a scout.

Mr. BRAGG. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LYMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. What is the date of the affidavit of the officers to which you refer?

Mr. LYMAN. I don't remember the date.

Mr. BRAGG. How many years since? Is it of recent date?

Mr. LYMAN. It was made within a short time.

Mr. BRAGG. I thought so; of course it was.

Mr. LYMAN. Within the last year perhaps; but it is no less the truth because it was made within the last year. Are these officers, the colonel of the regiment and the captain of the company with which he served, to be impeached and their testimony questioned because it was not given twenty years ago? And yet that is the implication from the gentleman's remark.

Mr. BRAGG. What evidence have you that he bought the uniform; what did he pay for it—what amount of money?

Mr. LYMAN. I have the evidence of himself and the officers with whom he served——

Mr. BRAGG. And where could he buy the uniform; in the Army?

Mr. LYMAN. He bought it before he left home, I suppose.

Mr. BRAGG. Where?

Mr. LYMAN. In Iowa, I presume. He did not go from Ohio, as the gentleman said.

Mr. BRAGG. The Government did not have any store-house where such a purchase could have been made in Iowa at that time. Where could he have bought his arms?

Mr. LYMAN. The testimony satisfied the committee upon that point; and the officers of his regiment, the colonel, and the captain of the company to which he was attached, testified that he was a faithful soldier, that his claim was true, and it seems to me that the Government can afford to pay for the services he performed.

I now yield so much time as he may desire to my colleague from Iowa, General WEAVER.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] desires to oppose this measure upon its merits, and without attacking the reputation of this brave lad, that is all right. But I think it is ungracious, after this young man has made his military history, after he has been honorably mentioned in the records of his regiment, after he has sustained his reputation before the committee having charge of his claim, that the gentleman should rise here without knowledge of the facts of the case on which the claim is based, and say before the American Congress and put it into the RECORD that the young man is trying to impose upon the House by trying to get a claim through here by begging. I know many men who went into the Army and served faithfully, and who would have spurned to ask for a pension or pay while their health was good. He gave not only an example of his valor to the Government, but he gave to the Government his health, a sacrifice which to many men is dearer than life itself, and why then should his reputation be assailed here without cause, without evidence? The Government has had his services as a soldier, and if it has paid any other man for his services it should pay this young man, now that he is in bad health and in need of it; and that is all there is of it.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. WISE. You say this boy has received honorable mention in the history of his regiment. The report does not speak of his services in a solitary battle.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Oh, doing service in battle is only an incident to a soldier's duty. Actual fighting does not take up much of a soldier's time. There is guard duty, the bivouac, the march, the picket duty, every-day duties of all kinds. These make up the life of a soldier.

Mr. WISE. This report says he was a bugler in a camp in Ohio.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That was the duty of a soldier. As a bugler, he called the soldiers to duty. It is true the Government refused to take this young man's services when he made his first application. But afterward it took his services, and there was an implied contract that he would be paid for them.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] wants to know if there were any uniforms for sale in Ohio. Does the gentleman not know there were uniforms all over the country? And whether there were uniforms or not, he could go and order a uniform to be made as uniforms were made for Federal soldiers. There is nothing but carping and criticism in what has been said. If it is held the Government shall not pay the man because there was no contract, all right; but do not let us have his character assailed here.

Mr. BRAGG. I have not assailed anybody's character. I know nothing of this boy's character or his services except from the record which the committee have made for him. I spoke of the record they have made, and it is absurd on its face.

I have seen many a painting, many a cut of the drummer-boy with the American flag wrapped round him lying dead in the attitude as if he had led the charge on the enemy's works, but nobody in his senses believes such a thing ever took place. But it looked pretty in the picture. If they had looked for the drummer-boy when there was a battle they would have found him knocking out the head of the drum as soon as the fight commenced, and going to the rear if he had the pretext of helping to carry a wounded soldier to an ambulance. If they had looked for the drum they would have found nothing but the shell of it. Poetry is one thing and reality is another.

It is absurd to suppose a boy twelve years old, too small to be taken even for a drummer, was selected by anybody for a cavalry scout. Yet that is what the report says. That must be the kind of cavalry my friend alluded to the other day when he spoke of the valuable cavalry we had in the first part of the war.

There is no real claim on the part of this boy. It is merely a trumped-up claim. In these days people seem to think all they have to do is to knock, and the scriptural promise will be fulfilled, "It shall be opened unto you;" that if they knock at the door of the Treasury through their member of Congress they will get what they want.

Take another class of cases just like this. We had during the war a great many benevolent females, elegant ladies, large-hearted, glorious women, that the soldiers learned to love for the efforts that they gratuitously made to alleviate their sufferings, to cool the heated brow, to moisten the parched lips, to take the last dying message from the cot to send it to the betrothed, or to the aged mother, or to the little child that was left fatherless. Most delightful scene! Most glorious and most patriotic memories! But now we find them coming here through the War Claims and Pension Committees—coming as beggars; and these gratuitous services for which we prized them so highly are all being coined down into dollars and cents. Twenty years after the war we are asked to give pensions to these ladies that gathered around the hospitals. It has knocked all the sentiment out of it. All those things we love to dream about are gone. That race of disinterested people is becoming extinct, and we see them one after another beggars banging at the Treasury door, saying, "Please give us some money."

It is time this should stop. I want some of the rich memories of the war preserved. I do not want it to be brought down to this basis of dollars and cents. I should like some patriotic sentiment left in this matter.

No doubt this was a very nice boy who followed and persisted in following the regiment and sticking about them for a year; they could not drive him off. But it is different when after twenty-two years he comes here and has the committee figure out that it must have cost him so much for his gun and that it must have cost him so much for his clothes. Then where did he get his fodder? It must have cost him so much for buying his rations. But the committee say they will reduce his bill from $250—that they will cut off $50. In that way they practice economy a little and give him $200.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I know, Mr. Chairman, that there are a great many pictures of the late war and of all wars that are very deceptive to the youth of the country, but during my brief military career I have known instances where drummer-boys were of very great service, and I was astonished to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] belittle their aid in carrying wounded men and officers off the field. One of the most valuable services that a boy could possibly render would be to aid in carrying off the wounded, because if he did not do it another soldier would have to do it, and so two soldiers would be taken out of the line, one wounded and the other helping him off the field. Therefore, when a drummer-boy helped a wounded soldier he was really keeping another soldier in line.

I know, sir, as I have said, that some war pictures are very deceptive, and I will tell you one that is far more likely to deceive than the picture of the drummer-boy at the front; that is the picture of the officer with his epaulettes, in front of his men, leading the charge and saying, "Come on, boys, and carry the works!" If there is a humbug in American military history, it is that portion of it which represents the commissioned officers leading the charge upon the enemy's works. As a rule, they were to be found where their orders and the rules of war required them to be—at a safe place in the rear—while the private soldiers did the shooting and the fighting and the dying. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us be fair. I know that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] did not intend to make an attack upon this young man, of whom he knows nothing. Let us be fair, and let us leave no trace upon the record that that young man's reputation has been assailed here. I resent that in his behalf and in behalf of the private soldiers of the Army.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the report, this is the case of a young man who went into the Army, or tried to get into the Army, and being perhaps too young to be mustered in, went along with the troops and really performed military duty; and now the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who not only thinks it his duty to look after the Army but also to look after the commissioned officers, and to see that the generals are promoted after they are retired, and to see that men who have been in the regular Army all their lives and are retired under the law shall come in and have their commissions raised and their pay raised after they have gone out of the Army—the gentleman from Wisconsin, who feels bound to attend to all these things, now comes in here and seeks to attack this boy upon the ground that he was a "camp-follower."

The gentleman wants to know who ever heard of a boy who was too young to be mustered into the Army rendering any military service? I can tell the gentleman of two boys in my own regiment who were so young that the mustering officer refused to muster them. They were orphan boys. Their two uncles had command of a company each; they uniformed the boys, gave them a musket apiece, and the boys started along with us without being mustered. At the battle of Richmond, Ky., they went into line and did as good fighting as any soldier in the regiment. During the fight, after we had been driven back, General Manson was passing, and these two little fellows were together and they presented arms and saluted him. The rest of us did not think of showing that respect to the commanding officer. That attracted the attention of the general, and he inquired about them, and had a special order issued that they should be mustered in for gallantry upon the battlefield. They were mustered in, and they afterward became the left and the right guides of the regiment, and when it was mounted they became scouts and messengers, and went with Sherman to the sea. [Applause.]

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Did you say that those two boys were ordered by the commanding general to be mustered into the service because they knew enough to present arms and the balance of you did not?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes, sir. [Laughter.] I say they were ordered to be mustered in, not for that particularly, but for gallantry, and they afterward did as much for their country as the man who led the Iron Brigade and who now comes here to attack a boy who bared his breast in the service of his country. [Applause.] If this young man did his duty he has a right to be paid for his service. But the brave chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs (which ought to be a brave committee) comes here and not only attacks this boy, but he seeks to travel outside of this record to attack the nurses who took care of the sick soldiers during the war; he says they are coming here now asking to be paid for their service—coming here as beggars. Why, sir, if a poor woman who gave her services to her country years ago has since lost her health and her means, and now comes and asks the representatives of that country to do something for her by way of compensation for her services in the past, I ask the chairman of the Military Committee if it is not as honorable for the Government to grant her request as it is to raise the pension of the widow of a general officer from $30 to $50 a month, or as honorable as to stand here and block legislation unless the House will consent to such an increase of pension. The committee have reported in favor of this bill because they believe that the Government can afford to be honest with the men who helped to defend it.

Mr. BRAGG. I beg pardon of this committee. I ought to have remembered that the bare idea of an officer in the service is to my distinguished friend who has just addressed the committee about like a red rag to a bull. I had no idea that he would break out into such terrible convulsions, or I should certainly have abstained from my opposition to this bill.

Where did this brave boy "bare his breast?" Why, he blew a bugle somewhere as a scout. Did the scouts who served with the gentleman's command herald their coming by bugles? Was that the kind of soldiering that the gentleman from Indiana did? When he went as a scout, did he go with a brass band? [Laughter.] If so, it shows me very conclusively that that portion of the Army to which he was attached suffered very much because it did not have some officer of the regular Army connected with it to teach them some little part of their duty.

Now, there is no occasion for all this talk about officers. Here is my friend from Iowa who wants to know whoever saw an officer lead a charge. I can tell him what I have seen. I have seen gentlemen who followed the "stars and bars," who bore commissions as officers, coming down in advance of their lines, the men having their muskets at right shoulder shift or at trail arms, and their slouch hats down over their heads, and I have seen these officers lead those men plump up against the musketry, and, being in front, keep them from firing, with the view of carrying the works at the point of the bayonet. I will say that much for them. I have seen officers who followed the other flag who did not say, "Go in, boys! I am a little lame; you will probably get driven back, and I will be here to receive you when you come!" The army that I had the honor to serve with had officers in it who were not afraid to fight—officers in whom their men had confidence, because the men believed them to be as brave as any men in the line, believed them to have courage and nerve, with the skill and the coolness to sweep with the eye over the field, to take advantage of the position, to cover the men where cover could be had, and to reach the point where the enemy could be assailed with most success and with the least loss. Those officers had the confidence of the soldiers. When any man who says he was a soldier makes it a part of his daily vocation to abuse officers, I think he must have belonged to that squad who were camp followers, who were always in the rear, who always reported the terrible destruction that had taken place in their command at the front, and that they were the only men who had not been killed as the battle went on.

That tremendous battle at Richmond, Ky.—what was it? Where is the record of that wonderful battle? How many troops were engaged? What advantage was gained or lost?

Why, sir, it was, I have no doubt, one of those skirmishes between outlying troops where here and there a shot was fired from the pickets, and they rallied back on the center, and the horns were sounded and the drums beat to move on "Johnny Reb," and when they moved up where they supposed he was, he had gone! [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I only want to recommend to the gentleman that he read the history of his country a little. If he will do so, he will find that the battle of Richmond, Ky., lasted for about ten hours; that there were several engagements, and that, for the number of troops engaged, it was as severe a battle as was fought during the war.

Mr. BRAGG. How many men fell in that action?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Well, sir, I have not the figures here.

Mr. BRAGG. That was such a great battle I should suppose the gentleman could give us an approximate estimate, at any rate.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I am not teaching the gentleman history. He ought to understand the history of his country. There were about nine thousand men on the Union side, and on the other about twelve or fifteen thousand of Kirby Smith's troops. It was the fight in which the Union forces were trying to stop Kirby Smith from marching upon Cincinnati.

The gentleman departs from the point in issue and seeks to say—I do not know whether he meant his remarks for me or for the gentleman from Iowa—that we have been abusing the officers. No one ever heard me abuse an officer. I have never on this floor tried to detract from the merits of any officer; but I do try to stand by the interests of the private soldiers, and not say to them, "We have time for legislation in the interest of the officers, but none for legislation in your interest." That is the issue.

Mr. BRAGG. Permit me one question as to statistics. Was it not the fact that nearly all of that command to which you belonged were captured at Richmond, Ky.?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Many of them were.

Mr. BRAGG. And is it not true that the balance of them were sent back to General Wolford to be drilled because they were such poor soldiers? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen will be quiet, I want to say that in that battle we were subjected to many humiliations, but to no humiliation so great as to be drilled by the gentleman from Kentucky. [Laughter.] I wish to say further that he was a very brave man, but I never saw him have his own troops under command in the line; and it is part of the history of the war that, while he nominally had about fourteen hundred men, he never was able to have more than two hundred of them together at once. [Laughter.] Now I wish to say further, in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order. It is impossible for us to understand this "history" while there is so much confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will resume their seats and preserve order.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, that it is a remarkable spectacle for a man who claims to be a Union soldier, and claims to have sympathy with the Union cause, now at this late day to gloat over a Union defeat. [Applause on Republican side.] That is a strange spectacle. Whether it is because he had no sympathy with the cause at the time or because his surroundings are such now as to prompt him to do so I know not, but I suppose it was the former.

The gentleman seeks to get after the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] and myself because we forsooth have stood here in defense of the private soldier. He seeks to draw the inference because we have done that we have been making a war upon the officers. It is not that at all, sir. It is to give the officer his just dues, and to give to the private soldier what belongs to him. What we wish is that when you grant legislation to one give them that legislation alike, and not make a privileged class of one to the exclusion of the other.

Mr. Chairman, as I said before, this is a claim for services rendered. And the gentleman seeks to attack this boy because he says he was a bugler in the Army. Why, sir, a bugler in the Army is just as necessary in his way as a general. [Laughter and applause.] He is just as necessary as a captain or a colonel. I have no doubt that the gentleman has often heard the notes of the bugle when it sounded the retreat, and no doubt he enjoyed it very much. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose this bill, but, on the contrary, to favor it, both by my speech and by my vote. The proof is apparent this boy did serve the Government during the war faithfully, and he ought to be paid for those services. I not only do not oppose it, but, on the contrary, as I have said, I shall vote for it.

I disagree with the chairman of our committee in this matter, but I do not rise to go into the merits of the case, but rather to reply to an unjust insinuation made by the distinguished and honorable gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON]. It so happens, sir, I am peculiarly surrounded in this House. Here I have a distinguished gentleman who commanded a brigade in my division. I refer to General HENDERSON, of Illinois. I am willing to have him state to this House whether I fought my men or not. I see distinguished officers of Kentucky here who fought against me. They too can say whether my command fought or not. It is a matter which they can not forget. [Laughter.] They will tell you that that command was always fighting. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it was my fortune during the war first to command a regiment, then a brigade, and after that a division. I am not ashamed of that regiment, sir, as a regiment; and it never was ashamed of me. [Applause.] I am not ashamed of that brigade as a brigade, and it never was ashamed of me. I am not ashamed of that gallant division, which fought in my presence, for I led them in more than one hundred battles, and that division never was ashamed of me. [Applause.]

Read the history of the war, sir, and you will learn I never drilled the troops under my command merely for dress parade. [Applause and laughter.] I never drilled them for dress parade, but, sir, I drilled them to fight, and they did fight. [Applause.] Those men were never afraid to fight, and they never were ashamed of the record which they made in the war.

Nor, sir, were they ever ashamed of the gallant men who took another view of the issues involved and who fought against them. History will tell who I was and what I did, and if there be any gentleman here who has not read that history of his country I commend it to him. He ought to read it. When he does it will tell him sure and plain whether I was a mere disciplinarian or not. It so happens that some of the cavalrymen who went down South from Richmond showed whether they were disciplined or not. I say that, and I say more than that, that they were disciplined, and in many a hardly-contested fight showed themselves to be gallant and brave men. Why, sir, they ran the war. [Laughter and applause.]

I have said all I desire in answer to the unkind insinuations of the gentleman from Indiana.

Now, there was a distinguished man, a great warrior—I speak of a man in Kentucky, and Kentuckians are generally right—who showed he was right. He was a great man, a man of powerful mind, a man thirsting to distinguish himself in the war. He went out in the cavalry. I say read that history and see whether the gentleman from Indiana judges correctly. The gentleman reminds me of a man who went in the infantry and got tired of walking [laughter], and then left his regiment and joined the cavalry. He said he got tired of walking and wanted to ride. [Laughter.]

But he did not stay very long in the cavalry until he resigned, because he found, as he said, that the cavalry led him into a fight, and he said that it was a dangerous place to be in. [Laughter.] He then joined the artillery, but they ran him right into the face of danger, and he said "This is no place for me; it is a very dangerous place." [Great laughter.]

After a while he went into the quartermaster department, and I read that about my friend the gentleman from Indiana the other day in his military history; but after getting into that department and thinking he was in a safe place a few days passed around and John Morgan came along and captured the quartermaster. He did not happen to capture this man, however, for he ran off. [Laughter and applause.]

He took himself away and got out of danger, and then he said he would resign and go home, because he could not find a safe place in the Army; he had tried all, the infantry, the artillery, and the cavalry, and even the quartermaster department, and all were dangerous. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, my friend from Indiana is a great man, a powerful speaker, a great soldier; but another strange thing about this man that I have been talking about which reminds me of my friend from Indiana is that he always hated the names of the officers after that matter took place. [Laughter.] He hates the cavalry, and the artillery, and the infantry officers, and he hated them with a sort of perfect hatred ever afterward. [Laughter.] But another thing; I have said all I wanted to say about the gentleman from Indiana and all I wanted to say about my humble self. I have many faults, and I thank God and the people that they have never all been told on me [great laughter], but no man ever charged me or my command with anything but true fighting.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, and there has been too much said here in this Congress against pensions, that there has been an effort upon every pension case here and an effort everywhere, by a certain class of men in the Congress of the United States to inculcate the idea that there was war and hatred between the officers and the privates; that there was a kind of bitterness between them, and I have heard that often here. There is no such feeling. The officers loved the privates and the privates loved the officers. I know that when an officer did his duty, when he was gallant and brave, that he was regarded as a sort of a father to his men, and where he was brave enough or skillful enough to inspire confidence in the soldiers they looked upon him with something of that kind of feeling. On the other hand, the officer loved the soldiers and entertained for his brave men who performed their duty gallantly something of the feeling of a father for his children.

If the soldiers were commanded by a man who had their respect and confidence there was unbounded affection between them, and I know that on every side the soldiers loved them. How was it that all the soldiers of the Army loved old "Pap" Thomas so? How was it and why was it that they all loved General Grant so much? How was it on the other side that all of the confederate soldiers had such devotion for Lee and for Stonewall Jackson? How was it with you, my distinguished friend [referring to General WHEELER], that your men loved you so? [Laughter.] There never was a true soldier who had the manhood and the heart and the soul of a soldier who did not love the soldiers of the Army and the officers of the Army, and there was a wealth of good feeling between them. They were brothers in danger, and to say that there was no affection between them is to mistake the facts. I only wish to say this, Mr. Chairman, in order that gentlemen may not undertake to tell the country—for the country loves both the officers and the men—that there was war and bitterness between the officers and the privates.

Now, a word upon another question. I am for pensioning every soldier in the Army, and every man knows that [laughter], and for giving to every officer of the Army who won distinction—that distinction which made his men feel proud of him—the full recognition of the Government, and their widows, too; and I favor higher pensions for officers' widows than for privates', and have always voted so, and no private soldier has ever grumbled about that.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee has enough information now as to the gallantry of both armies, and therefore I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to amend by reporting it adversely.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. RYAN. The proposition, Mr. Chairman, on which the committee is to vote is not understood, I think, generally.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas——

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Chairman, I want to know what is the question before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will suspend a moment and hear the statement of the Chair he will ascertain. The bill as introduced provides for a payment of $250, but the committee recommend striking out "fifty," so as to make it read "$200." That is the amendment on which a vote is now to be taken.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the bill be reported to the House with an adverse recommendation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will suggest that we have a vote on the question of reporting it favorably.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the favorable report is voted down it will amount to the same thing.

The question being taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. HAMMOND, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 93.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BRAGG and Mr. LYMAN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 99.

Mr. BRAGG. That is not a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point having been made that a quorum has not voted, the Chair will order the roll to be called.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DUNHAM. I am satisfied there is a quorum present. Can we not get along without taking up time in calling the roll?

Mr. HAMMOND. That was the object I had in making my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. When a quorum has not voted it becomes the duty of the Chair, under the rule, to cause the roll to be called.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Adams, J. J.	Curtin,	Little,	Sayers,
Aiken,	Davis,	Lore,	Seney,
Anderson, C. M.	Dawson,	Lovering,	Seymour,
Anderson, J. A.	Dingley,	Matson,	Snyder,
Arnot,	Dorsey,	McComas,	Spriggs,
Ballentine,	Dougherty,	McKinley,	Stewart, Charles
Barry,	Ellsberry,	Millard,	Stewart, J. W.
Bayne,	Ermentrout,	Mitchell,	St. Martin,
Belmont,	Fisher,	Muller,	Stone, E. F.
Bingham,	Foran,	Murphy,	Stone, W. J., Mo.
Bland,	Forney,	Neece,	Strait,
Blount,	Frederick,	Negley,	Tarsney,
Brumm,	Gallinger,	Norwood,	Taulbee,
Buchanan,	Gibson, C. H.	O'Donnell,	Taylor, E. B.
Bunnell,	Gibson, Eustace	O'Ferrall,	Thomas, J. R.
Burleigh,	Glover,	O'Neill, Charles	Thompson,
Burnes,	Goff,	O'Neill, J. J.	Throckmorton,
Butterworth,	Grosvenor,	Outhwaite,	Townshend,
Campbell, J. M.	Harmer,	Parker,	Viele,
Campbell, J. E.	Hatch,	Payson,	Wakefield,
Campbell, T. J.	Henderson, D. B.	Phelps,	Ward, J. H.
Candler,	Henley,	Pidcock,	Warner, A. J.
Caswell,	Hewitt,	Pindar,	Weaver, A. J.
Catchings,	Hiestand,	Pirce,	Wellborn,
Cobb,	Holmes,	Plumb,	White, A. C.
Cole,	Hopkins,	Randall,	Whiting,
Collins,	Hudd,	Reed, T. B.	Wilkins,
Cooper,	Kelley,	Rice,	Worthington.
Crain,	Lawler,	Robertson,
Culberson,	Le Fevre,	Romeis,

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that, the Committee of the Whole House having found itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and herewith reported to the House the names of the absentees, to be entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Unless the demand is made the names of absentees will not be read.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that my colleague from Georgia, Mr. CANDLER, be excused. He left the Hall very unwell.

The SPEAKER. Excuses are not necessary under this call. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal. From the report made by the chairman it appears there are 119 absentees, and there is a quorum present. The committee, under the rule, will resume its sitting.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken on Mr. SPRINGER's motion; and there were—ayes 69, noes 75.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question was on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] to strike out the word "favorable" from the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] and insert the word "adverse." The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will only those vote who did not vote formerly?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the better method would be for the vote to be taken over again. The former vote was exhausted when the fact was developed of no quorum. The Chair requests that all gentlemen favoring the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia will now pass between the tellers and be counted.

After some time had been occupied in the count,

Mr. HAMMOND said: It is plain the quorum has gone home. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers have not yet made their report. If all gentlemen have voted who desire to do so the Chair will ask the tellers to report the result.

The tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 95.

Mr. BRAGG. I think that is not a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will direct the roll to be called, that members present may answer and that the absentees may be noted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that motion can only be made by unanimous consent. The rule provides that when the fact of no quorum is developed the roll shall be called.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know that the rule provides that, but I do not think that excludes the motion that the committee rise. If it did we would now be in the condition that the House could never adjourn.

Mr. KING. We can never get out of the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. We can never get out of the committee for this reason: the roll is called, and if it appears that there is a quorum present the fact is reported to the House, and we must go back again into Committee of the Whole, and so on repeatedly.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Well, if we have got into a position where we can not get out we had better remain in it. [Laughter.] We have been skirmishing here all the week for a quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. The motion that the committee rise is equivalent to the motion to adjourn in the House, and that is always in order, if anybody can get the floor to make it. Upon the other theory it would be impossible to dissolve this session, because, as I have said, if we call the roll and find a quorum present we must go back into committee.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Who is responsible for getting us into this position?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know. I am sure that I am not. Mr. Chairman, I think it is in order to move that the committee do now rise, and I make that motion.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked in the Digest, page 422.

The Clerk read as follows:

A quorum is not required in the Committee of the Whole House on a motion that the committee rise, for the reason that it is the equivalent of the motion to adjourn in the House, on which a quorum is not required, and also for the further reason that as the motion to adjourn has been held not to be "business," the motion that "the committee rise" is governed by the same rules.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I think that is a pertinent citation, as we certainly are not trying to do any business to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to present my point of order. By paragraph 2 of Rule XXIII it is provided that "whenever a Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum the chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise." If upon the motion that the committee rise the point is insisted on that there is no quorum in the committee, then I apprehend that under this rule it would be the duty of the chairman to proceed to have the roll called; but if upon the motion that the committee rise a quorum is not insisted upon, then I think that under the paragraph just read from the Digest the committee could rise.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not necessary to call the roll when the committee wants to adjourn. If that were required in such a case we should find ourselves in committee and unable to get out.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, the best way to get out of a trouble is the easiest way, and in this case the easiest way would be for the gentleman who has made this point of a quorum to withdraw it and let us go on and do business, instead of filibustering here as we have been doing for two days.

Mr. FELTON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the roll-call will go on. It is manifest, and has been since morning, that the object here is to take up time in filibustering, and the time may as well be occupied in calling the roll as in talking.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] having made a motion which the Chair decided to be out of order, and having submitted his views upon the point, the Chair desires to say that in the opinion of the Chair, under clause 2 of Rule XXIII, whenever it is disclosed on a vote by tellers that no quorum of a Committee of the Whole House is present it becomes the duty of the chairman to cause the roll to be called, and the Chair thinks that no other motion can be made at that time under the rule. The roll must be called, and the committee must then rise and report the names of the absentees to the House.

Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

Mr. DUNHAM. And then, Mr. Chairman, if there is a quorum present, we must go right back and be in the same fix as before. Is that the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that when gentlemen get into the House they will have a more able parliamentarian to decide questions than they have in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like the attention of the Chair for a moment. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the question. The regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The CHAIRMAN (before the call was concluded). As the hour of 5 o'clock, at which the House, under its order, must take a recess, has now arrived, the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House takes a recess until half past 7 o'clock, the session this evening to be devoted to the transaction of business under the order heretofore made.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar for the consideration of bills under the special order for Friday evening.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. HERBERT in the chair.

MARIA K. RITTER.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5693) for the relief of Maria K. Ritter.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it be laid on the table. The reason for such action is that the claim has been allowed in the Pension Office since the bill was introduced.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

WILLIAM J. OWINGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4097) for the relief of William J. Owings.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

MARY HOWARD FARQUHAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1201) for the relief of Mary Howard Farquhar.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill, I think, has been objected to; and I will ask that it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

PHŒBE H. MEECH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1649) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask that this bill be passed over. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] who made the report asked me to make this request.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, the reason this bill was passed over on Friday evening two weeks ago was the fact that there was not then before us any certification as to the commission of this officer. At that time there was pending in the Senate a bill similar to this, and the proper official certification of the Adjutant-General of the State of New York was in the hands of Senator BLAIR. I now hold in my hand that certification. There is testimony in the case that the adjutant of the regiment carried the commission of this officer through Mexico and brought it as far as New Orleans, and now the official document is here.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] insist on his proposition?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. No, sir; but I am opposed to the bill. If we are now to consider it I ask for the reading of the report of the committee. There is nothing in the report to show that this man was ever mustered as a lieutenant or served as such. On that ground I am opposed to increasing the pension.

Mr. FARQUHAR. As there is opposition to the bill, I ask that it be passed over until the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] who reported it shall be present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] asks that this bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

JAMES H. DARLING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7257) granting a pension to James H. Darling.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Darling, late of Company G, Seventy-third Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. CABELL. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7257) granting a pension to James H. Darling, respectfully submit the following report:

Claimant was a private of Company G, Seventy-third Ohio Volunteers, having enlisted November 19, 1861, and was discharged December 12, 1862. On June 18, 1879, claimant filed his application for a pension, alleging that he contracted rheumatism at Camp Logan, Ohio, about January 20, 1862; his claim was rejected because "the evidence failed to show the origin of the alleged disability in the service and line of duty," and the claimant alleging his inability to furnish the required proof as to origin.

Two neighbors, who had known claimant for thirty years, testified in 1881 that he was a stout, able-bodied man, able to do all manner of farm work before his enlistment, and know that claimant had no such thing as rheumatism. It is shown by the testimony of comrades McKee and Makinson that claimant broke down with rheumatism at Camp Fetterman, West Virginia, and was sent home about February 1, 1862, on account of his disability. In corroboration of this the report of the Adjutant-General, United States Army, shows:

"Claimant reported on roll for March and April, 1862; at home, on sick-list, May and June, 1862; absent without leave, July and August, 1862; deserted March 5, 1862. Charges of desertion and absence without leave are removed; he went to his home in Jackson County, Ohio, by proper military authority, some time during March or April, 1862, where he remained sick and unable to travel to December 12, 1862, when he reported at Columbus, Ohio; he was discharged at that post December 12, 1862, on surgeon's certificate of disability."

It is shown by the evidence that claimant has been a sufferer from rheumatism since his discharge, at times being compelled to use crutches. Two medical examinations by examining surgeons of the Pension Office, dated March 7, 1881, and March 22, 1882, show him to be disabled by rheumatism, and the affidavit of Dr. C. Campbell, of Cherrydale, Kans., dated March 24, 1886, shows him still disabled.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. CABELL. I object. This man ought not to have a pension.

Mr. PETERS. As I did not enter the House until the Clerk had begun the reading of the report, I ask to what company this soldier belonged.

The Clerk again read from the report the following:

Claimant was a private of Company G, Seventy-third Ohio Volunteers.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I hope the gentleman who reported this bill will explain to the House how the charge of desertion was removed.

Mr. MORRILL. Why, Mr. Chairman, the report itself shows that the charge of desertion was removed by the Adjutant-General. It is stated in the report of the Adjutant-General that he removed the charge of desertion because the man was improperly reported as a deserter, having been home sick on proper leave.

Mr. CABELL. The report also shows that this man rendered little or no service to the Government during the entire time he was enrolled as a soldier. Though the report states that the charge of desertion was removed it does not state at what time it was removed, nor for what cause; nor does the report make it appear that the charge was properly removed. The House has no information on these points. There is a statement that the man was charged with desertion; and I think it further appears that he was not much of a soldier during the whole time up to his discharge. I think that in such cases we ought not to grant pensions by special law. Whatever may be the reasons for granting pensions to good soldiers, it is not proper to grant them in such a loose way as this.

Mr. MORRILL. My impression is that this case is a very strong one. The extract from the Adjutant-General's report—it is not the language of my report at all—shows that the charge of desertion was removed. It shows the man went in and served five or six months, and was then taken sick and continued sick of rheumatism about four months. He was then discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability. The evidence as to his being disabled by rheumatism is good.

Mr. STEELE. Why could he not get a pension at the Pension Office?

Mr. MORRILL. Because he could not prove his disability was the result of disease contracted in the service.

Mr. PETERS. I belonged to the regiment this soldier was attached to. I have here the regimental history. I came into the House as the report was being read. It appears this rheumatism was contracted in Camp Logan, but from the evidence afterward it seems it was contracted at Fetterman, W. Va. I am aware the regiment had very hard service at Fetterman, and there was much sickness in the regiment at that place. Prior to reaching West Virginia we had no service except camp service.

If the disease is alleged to have been contracted at Fetterman there is good ground to think the evidence is correct. I think one hundred or perhaps more died of that disease contracted at Fetterman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CABELL. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 1.

Mr. CABELL. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum having been made, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman tell us if it is his purpose to object to any bill which may be read? If it is not, then I suggest this bill be laid aside to see if we can not strike some of those reported from the Invalid Pensions Committee to which there will be no objection.

Mr. CABELL. The gentleman has no right to ask me any such question as that. I am standing here upon my rights as a Representative, and will exercise them to suit myself.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the question. I did not put it to be offensive to the gentleman at all.

Mr. CABELL. In that view then I have no objection to saying that I do not intend to object to any case which I think is a proper one. I have served on the Invalid Pensions Committee and have examined a great many of these cases which are brought here upon this Calendar. I shall raise no objection to any proper case, but where I believe it is not a proper case I shall not only object, but shall insist on my objection to the best of my ability.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to passing over this bill?

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the bill being passed over. I have reported a great many of these cases and have spent much time in the investigation of the testimony upon which they are founded. I have not the slightest interest in one case out of twenty-five which I have reported. I have examined this case and looked over the whole of the evidence to support it, and I will say it is as meritorious as two-thirds of those which have been passed. I do not know who introduced the bill and care less. I gave it a thorough investigation, but am willing to withdraw it if the gentleman who introduced it does not object.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The Clerk has passed over one bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee will first be disposed of. Is there objection to passing over the pending bill?

There was no objection, and the bill was passed over for the present.

NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

Mr. ELDREDGE. We have passed over a bill (H. R. 4702) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Was not that bill passed over?

Mr. MORRILL. It is a general bill and can not be considered to-night under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been before the committee to-night.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Is not this a general bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not tell until it is read.

The bill was read.

Mr. MORRILL. Under the order for these night sessions, we can only consider private bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions granting pensions.

Mr. DOCKERY. That bill, then, is clearly not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill does not seem to be in order, because it does not grant a pension. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on that point?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. This is in the nature of a pension. If the statute is amended as this bill provides it will put certain persons who served in the Navy for twenty years upon what is called the half-pay list, instead of sending them to the asylum for sailors. It is exactly tantamount to a pension, and the money that would be drawn by these men does not come out of the general fund appropriated for the payment of pensions, but from the fund which has accumulated under this provision of the naval regulations and is now in the Treasury, and amounting to ten times the pay of the men who will be benefited by the operation of this bill. Several millions of dollars have accumulated in the Treasury to pay these sailors; and in view of the fact that it affects but few persons, it has been put by the Speaker upon the Private Calendar.

I repeat, although it does not grant a pension to the recipients, it would be in the nature of a pension by placing them upon this retired-list, which amounts to the same thing.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. We are not able to hear a word the gentleman is saying.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I hope gentlemen are not deaf on that side.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not seem to talk plainly enough.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am not to blame for that. This bill is in the nature of a pension bill, I say.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Now we can hear you.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am glad of it. If the bill goes into operation and the statute is amended as the bill contemplates, it will put about one hundred and twenty-five sailors on the half-pay list instead of sending them to the asylum for sailors; and being in the nature of a private claim, and benefiting but few persons, and being tantamount to a pension bill, it has been placed upon this Calendar.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the bill is clearly out of order under the special order providing for these sessions of the House. That provides——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this is not a bill granting a pension. It amends certain pension laws, and would be the basis of other and further applications for pensions, but it is not a bill granting pensions; consequently the Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

JOSEPH GUY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7253) for the relief of Joseph Guy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Guy, formerly a member of Company C, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SPENCER W. TRYON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7249) to pension Spencer W. Tryon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Spencer W. Tryon, late a private in Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MAYBERRY VANCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6247) granting a pension to Mayberry Vance.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mayberry Vance, of Danville, State of Pennsylvania, late a private in the marine service of the United States.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Let us have the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

Mayberry Vance enlisted as a private marine, United States Navy, July 27, 1863, and was discharged July 27, 1867.

He bases his claim for pension on the following facts:

"About July 26, 1864, while at Pensacola navy-yard, Florida, either from neglect of guard duty or missing roll-call, he was confined, by order of Capt. L. L. Dorsan, in a room or cell on the beach called a jail. His blanket and bed were taken away, and he was compelled to lie on the cement floor, which being damp caused him to contract asthma."

The Pension Department rejected his claim "on the ground that, there being no record or evidence in the Navy Department of the alleged disease, and the inability of claimant to furnish satisfactory evidence connecting said disease with the service and line of duty."

A careful examination of the papers in this case shows that the sailor was in the service four years, and he is always reported as being present.

There are in evidence about twenty affidavits from the sailor's comrades, and in every case the evidence is sworn to, and clearly shows that Mayberry Vance, the claimant, entered the naval service a sound man and free from all disease, and that he has suffered from asthma from the date of discharge up to the present time, the time of taking their evidence. It is clearly shown that the sailor's condition is gradually getting worse from the disease.

The examining surgeon, Dr. Strawbridge, testifies that the disease is permanent, and in his opinion did originate in the service. He finds—

"An asthmatic cough, an irritable, easily-excited heart. Respiration imperfect over both lungs, with dullness on percussion; scarcely any respiratory sounds, and no apparent dilatation over lower half of right lung. Thinks his trouble more that of an old chronic bronchitis than asthma."

There seems to be a diversity of opinion between the assistant surgeon and the examining surgeon. The assistant surgeon states—

"That during the years 1865, 1866, and 1867 he was stationed as assistant surgeon, United States Navy, at the Pensacola navy-yard; that during said time Maybery Vance, at that time in the United States Marine Corps, was repeatedly under his care and was treated by him for bronchitis."

While the examining surgeon again states:

"Have seen this man since his examination (March, 1880) in a very severe attack of asthma. Has considerable cough, respiration very imperfect over both lungs, with dullness; respiratory sounds feeble."

This sailor was unquestionably free from disease when he entered the service, and he is undoubtedly subject to some affection of the lungs, probably asthma, which, as usual, becomes worse as its victim grows older. As to its incurrence while in the Navy the testimony of some twenty of his mates shows that it was produced in the manner claimed.

Your committee are aware that some allowance must be made for sailors' yarns, which never become less by frequent repetition in the forecastle. It scarcely seems credible that, for so trivial an offense, a sailor would be exposed to such an unusual punishment—a punishment which did not cease at the time of its infliction, but has continued ever since and will last during this sailor's life.

Your committee are unwilling to believe that naval officers of the United States would resort to a method of punishment scarcely to be looked for on a Russian man-of-war.

They therefore discard this theory of the incurrence of the disease, but nevertheless remain of the opinion that it was contracted in the service, and ask the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARIA CUNNINGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5414) granting a pension to Maria Cunningham.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria Cunningham, widow of William Cunningham, deceased, late of Company K, One hundred and twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I dislike very much to vote for a bill, even a pension bill, without knowing all about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman call for the report?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I either desire to hear the report, or if it is voluminous and will occupy too much time, I should like to have some gentleman who understands what the bill is make some explanation of it. These cases seem to be undergoing a review from higher authority than the Congress of the United States, and I think that we ought to know what we are doing.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

W. H. Cunningham, private Company K, One hundred and twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, was mustered February 11, 1862; discharged January 20, 1865, and died December 3, 1877.

His widow's claim was rejected because her husband died in 1877 from an obscure cause, possibly diabetes, which can not be shown by competent testimony (in the absence of record) to have had its origin in the military service.

In this claim there is the usual evidence as to soundness of soldier prior to enlistment, and your committee accept that fact as established. It is in evidence that soldier received a gunshot wound of head beneath right temple in action at Fort Gillmore, Va., September 29, 1864.

The examining surgeon stated there was no ratable degree of disability from that cause.

The hospital record states that Private William H. Cunningham received a severe wound of skull by shell in action September, 1864, and was sent to corps hospital. The record of his treatment at various times in several hospitals is given with considerable minuteness as to prescriptions used. January, 1863, he is admitted to hospital with febris remittens and rheumatism; February, March, April, May, and June, 1863, with chronic rheumatism; October, 1863, chronic dysentery; November, 1863, febris remittens; December, 1863, tonsillitis; March, 1864, erysipelas. This soldier died in the Fayette County Insane Hospital from alleged diabetes.

There is a labored attempt to trace the diabetes and suffering in the back to gunshot wound in the head, which your committee think, under the circumstances of this case, entirely unnecessary. Here is a man shown to have entered the Army well and sound; he is shown also to have received a severe shell wound of the head. He is also shown by the hospital record on two different occasions to have had attacks of remittent fever; also an attack of tonsillitis, a long bout with the rheumatism, and an attack of erysipelas. He is shown to have returned from the Army broken in health, never able to do a day's work, growing steadily worse, and dying insane in the almshouse of alleged diabetes.

The widow's claim for pension was rejected because alleged diabetes is not shown to have been incurred in the Army, and in fact one of the surgeons states that soldier could not have had diabetes, because he was positive that he never treated a case of that kind in the Army; so that this case is made to hinge largely upon the recollection of this surgeon as to whether he did treat the case of diabetes, or whether this soldier may not have suffered from it without his knowledge. It is very possible that there may have been a mistake in diagnosis, but whether this soldier actually died of diabetes, whether he had this specific disease in the Army or not, does not seem to your committee absolutely necessary to decide.

These facts remain: (1) Soldier was well when he enlisted; (2) he was severely wounded in head; (3) he had various attacks of disease in the Army; (4) when discharged he was broken in health, grew steadily worse, and died insane in an almshouse.

These considerations induce your committee to report favorably and to ask the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recpmmendation that it do pass.

SARAH HARBAUGH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6895) granting a pension to Sarah Harbaugh.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Harbaugh, widow of George F. Harbaugh, late a private in Company C, Sixty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) is as follows:

George I. Harbaugh was a private in Company C, Sixty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. This soldier enlisted August 1, 1861, was discharged September 7, 1864, and died October 4, 1881. It appears that the husband of this claimant was found dead in a pottery. A jury of inquest attributed his death to disease of the heart.

The claim was rejected because of want of ability to trace the affection of the heart to the soldier's service in the Army.

It appears that the soldier was somewhat peculiar in his ways, and that some considered him a crank during the earlier period of his service in the Army, but it is stated by his captain, H. O. C. Oahmler, that he always performed his duty as a soldier. He was wounded in the ankle May 2, 1863, on the battlefield of Fredericksburg, at Marye's Heights, and from that time on his mental aberration became more marked and decided.

After his discharge from the Army a suit de lunatico inquirendo was instituted in the court of common pleas of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, in which various hallucinations to which the soldier was subject were detailed. Among others he imagined himself to be the Prince de Joinville, and that the French were in pursuit of him with a view to taking his life. The testimony of a former comrade, who met him about this time, and saw him on several occasions afterward, describes with considerable minuteness of detail the mental aberrations to which this man was subject. He mentions his extreme restlessness and disposition to be always on the move. The point in this case is as to whether any connection can be traced between the cause of soldier's death (disease of the heart) and his service in the Army, and this is the conclusion which your committee find it very difficult to arrive at with any degree of certainty. The jury of inquest find that soldier died of disease of the heart, as was previously stated.

No reasons are given as to why the physician arrived at this conclusion. It is possible that he may have died of apoplexy, and if this latter were true, then the connection between the cause of death and its incurrence in the Army would be much more easy to trace. It will be noticed that the soldier was subject to the same aberrations after discharge that he manifested during his service, and the sequence as to this is established clearly enough. It is claimed, and perhaps truly, that the soldier's wandering habits, irregular life, and privations contributed to produce the heart disease. As to this your committee are utterly unable to decide.

The only facts about which there is any certainty are that claimant's husband, notwithstanding many eccentricities, was a good soldier, and he was wounded in action; that afterward his mental disturbance increased, and that after wandering around the country for some years he was found dead. He left a wife and five children.

Your committee, in view of the impossibility of ascertaining the exact cause of soldier's sickness and death, gave his family the benefit of the doubt, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is no gentleman present in this committee more favorably disposed to granting soldiers pensions than myself; but I think it is better for us all to consider very carefully, in acting upon these private bills, whether we may not do something or pass some bill like this which would possibly bring the entire system of granting pensions into discredit and disrepute before the country. If we are here to grant pensions for service, that is one thing; if we are here to grant pensions for disabilities that are traceable to the service in the line of duty, that is another. If we are here to grant pensions simply because a man was a good soldier, we would pension nearly the entire Army. If we are here to grant pensions because a man was a good soldier and was wounded, but the wound was not the potential cause of the death or disability, then we should pension a very large majority, because a great majority of the pending claims are of that class.

I do not believe that in this case, as disclosed by the report, the death is traced even inferentially to the service or to wounds; and so believing, I shall content myself with casting my individual vote against the bill, leaving every other gentleman to act as his own judgment shall dictate. But I desire to say that we may now well pause to consider whether by granting pensions in the exceedingly liberal and, I may be permitted to say, possibly improvident manner in which we have been seemingly acting, we are not bringing the entire system into discredit and disrepute with all the people.

Mr. BAYNE. I can not say that I sympathize with the views of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] with reference to the granting of pensions to widows of soldiers whose families are left in destitute circumstances. My belief is that in a case like this where the man was a good soldier and served the whole three years' term of his enlistment, when he leaves a widow and five children in destitute circumstances, and when he entered the service in good health and having come out of it was subject to mental aberration and also contracted disease, it is the duty of the Government to grant a pension. I shall myself vote for every bill that has features of that character.

The special bills are intended not for the purpose of granting pensions in cases which are already provided for by general law, but to meet those general cases where the general law fails to provide a pension.

Mr. PETTIBONE. By reason of its generality.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, by reason of its generality; and this claim, like many others that have come before the House of Representatives and the Senate, should be passed upon that ground and upon that principle. I myself am familiar with the history of this soldier. He served his country faithfully and well. He was a brave soldier. The facts were not fully set forth in the affidavit. The gentleman on the committee who drew this report has given the bare facts as they appear by the evidence. My colleague, Dr. SWOPE, from his knowledge of medicine and surgery and from his knowledge of those causes that are likely to affect a soldier in the service of his country, is quite as capable in framing a report to trace the cause of the difficulty as the surgeons and others who have examined the case in haste at different times, and he has given to those cases that have been referred to him a careful and critical examination.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is on the statement in the report that the committee were unable to trace the cause of this man's death that I based my remarks.

Mr. BAYNE. The report does not say it is not traceable. But they say it may be traceable to the exposure in the service, and their belief is that it is traceable to that, and that the conclusion that he died from other causes than those which would be traceable to his exposure in the service was perhaps an erroneous one. But they find that this soldier, having entered the service a sound man, having served faithfully his full term of enlistment, having been wounded in the service, having left the service and become subject to these mental aberrations and other trouble which culminated ultimately in his death—in view of all these circumstances they give the soldier the benefit of the doubt, and recommend granting to the widow and five children, who are in destitute circumstances, this pension.

If this case does not appeal to the generosity of the Government, if it does not rest upon the very principle upon which these pensions are granted, that is to say, that when a man who went into the service, and served his country faithfully and well during the war, died leaving a dependent family without means of support they ought to receive the support of this Government, then I fail to see why there should be any special act of Congress passed at all in any case.

As I was about to say, I am familiar myself with the facts in this case. I knew this man, I know his widow, and know this to be a case fully deserving of a pension from the Government; and I hope there will be no objection to this or to any other case that presents features similar to this.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANDREW G. HILLBERG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7066) for the relief of Andrew G. Hillberg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew G. Hillberg, late a private in Company A, Sixth Regiment Minnesota State Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

After the word "volunteers," in line 7, strike out the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month," and insert in lieu thereof the words "and grant him a pension for varicose veins in addition to the pension he is now receiving for partial deafness."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GREEN CHAMBERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7299) for the relief of Green Chambers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Green Chambers, late a private in Company H, One hundred and fifteenth United States Colored Troops, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. O'HARA) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7299) for the relief of Green Chambers, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted as a private in Company H, One hundred and fifteenth United States Colored Troops, September 20, 1864, and was discharged July 11, 1865; claims a pension for disability incurred while in line of duty at Cynthiana, Ky., fall of 1864. While working on a stockade helping to roll up a log the end of which he was lifting slipped back and the handspike which he held in his hand was forced against him, striking him in such a manner as to cause a rupture, which continued to grow worse, and at present he is a great sufferer from its effects. Claim rejected on the ground of claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory evidence showing prior soundness and origin of disability.

Board of medical examiners state soldier has direct inguinal hernia of right side, wears a truss, but it does not keep the bowels up; has also a large hydrocele of same side, and gives him one-half total rating. War Department record shows soldier discharged July 31, 1865, on account of hernia, also that he was treated at Dennison United States Army general hospital for large inguinal hernia of both sides, rendering any exertion painful and fatiguing. No records of the regiment on file subsequent to April 1, 1864.

Claimant states that he is unable to furnish further testimony as to prior soundness, because he does not know of the whereabouts of any officer of the company by whom he can prove prior soundness; that he was a slave in Kentucky until he enlisted; that he was perfectly sound when he enlisted; the officer casued him to strip, and he was thoroughly examined by the surgeon. Capt. Charles Ines, his captain, was from the State of New York, who at the time of his injury ordered him sent to the hospital, and he does not know of the present whereabouts of the said Captain Ines.

Moses Martin and Liston McCadden in a joint affidavit testify that they have known claimant for over twenty-five years (the exact date they do not know); knew him prior to his enlistment, and at that time he was free from hernia, and was a sound, healthy man; that since his discharge from the Army at times he has been a great sufferer, and at all times he has been unable to perform any kind of manual labor and only able to do such work as required no lifting and very light in its character.

The official record showing that soldier was in the service of the United States for some time before he was treated for hernia and his own statements as to prior soundness, corroborated by two other disinterested persons, uncontradicted, entitle him to the presumption that the disability for which he claims a pension was incurred in the service of the United States and in the line of duty.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like some member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to inform me why this pension could not be granted at the Pension Office.

Mr. MORRILL. The reason is stated in the report. It was because there was not enough testimony to satisfy the Pension Bureau of the prior soundness of the claimant.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is not required by the law. Under the act of March 4, 1885, proof of prior soundness is dispensed with. That amendment of the law was made in the bill as reported by the conference committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I presume the case was rejected before the passage of that law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That might have been; but I do not see why he can not have the case reopened.

Mr. PERKINS. There may be circumstances even under the existing law which create a suspicion in the Pension Office that the man was not sound at the date of enlistment. He is required to prove to the satisfaction of the office that he was sound at that time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He is presumed to have been sound.

Mr. O'HARA. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] will investigate the matter he will find that in many cases of applications by colored soldiers, where the claim is established by proof positive or proof which ought to be regarded as positive, they are rejected as insufficiently proved because the witnesses have signed by a mark. I have thoroughly examined this case, and it is just as the report shows.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I asked the question simply for information.

Mr. STEELE. As I understand it, the law requires the Government to prove that the applicant was not sound when he entered the service. This pension ought certainly to be allowed by the Pension Office.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, as matter of fact, I know of several cases which have been rejected by the Pension Office by reason of the lack of proof of soundness, and even to-day I have received a communication from the Pension Office stating that the applicant must furnish proof of prior soundness. I do not know when this case now under consideration was rejected by the Pension Office, but I do know that it is still the rule and practice in the office to require proof of soundness. In this case it appears from the report that this man had hernia, that he was treated for hernia while he was in the service, and that he was discharged for hernia. He states himself that he was stripped and examined, and the presumption is that he was sound when he went into the service. He states that he is unable to find proof, because he does not know where his officers live. It is a matter of common history that the officers who commanded the colored troops did not generally come from the localities where those troops were raised. I think that the best thing to do in this case is to pass the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have no objection to passing the bill, but I do not see why the man could not get his pension through the Pension Office.

Several MEMBERS. "Vote!" "Vote!"

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES STOBAUGH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7660) granting a pension to James Stobaugh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Stobaugh, late of Company B, Third Regiment Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7660) granting a pension to James Stobaugh, having given the same careful consideration, report:

James Stobaugh enlisted June 1, 1862, in Company B, First Arkansas Infantry, and was discharged with his company at expiration of service, December 31, 1862. He re-enlisted in Company B, Third Arkansas Cavalry, September 23, 1863, and was discharged therefrom May 22, 1865.

In his application for pension he alleges that about September 20, 1862, while performing service as a soldier, he with several others were attacked at Lewisburg, Ark., while there recruiting, and he was wounded in the right shoulder. Says that captain and lieutenant are both dead, but the fact is well established by the testimony of several comrades who were present.

His claim was rejected because the date of receiving wound is alleged by claimant and comrades three days before the date of his enrollment as shown by the records in the War Department.

The records of the War Department give date of enrollment as September 23, 1863, and date of muster October 29, 1863. It does not seem probable that claimant would have been accepted and enrolled three days after receiving the wound; and as the claimant and comrades fix the date about the 20th, it is not a violent presumption to assume that it was after the enrollment, since this soldier would have been very likely to have enrolled his own name before recruiting others. But even if his wound was received three days before his enrollment it is proven satisfactorily that he was on duty, and his six months' previous and nearly two years' subsequent service clearly entitle him to the relief sought.

The official examination finds a present disability from the wound. So, in view of all the facts, your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to answer a suggestion made by several friends near me who think that I have misstated the law in regard to the presumption of soundness. In the last pension appropriation bill, passed on the 4th day of March last, but in the legislative day of March 3, there is a proviso in the following language: "Provided that all applicants for pensions shall be presumed to have had no disability at the time of enlistment, but such presumption may be rebutted."

Mr. O'HARA. It is very easy for the office to raise a presumption of unsoundness.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILHELM NOLTE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7688) granting a pension to Wilhelm Nolte.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Wilhelm Nolte, late a private in Company A, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll of the United States, and pay him a pension of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7688) granting a pension to Wilhelm Nolte, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

Wilhelm Nolte was a private in Company A, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers. He was discharged from the service March 1, 1862, for chronic rheumatism, as stated in his certificate of discharge.

Claimant swears that he can not furnish medical evidence of treatment since service, as he has been very poor and has treated himself; but he furnishes abundant lay testimony from a great many comrades, neighbors, and friends, all of whom are certified to as truthful and deserving credit, showing a continuance of disability from discharge to date.

Philip Herman, of Muscatine, Iowa, testifies as follows:

"I first met Wilhelm Nolte after the war, in 1866, at Indianapolis, although I had known him from the year 1858 at Vernon, Ind. I know that at the time he enlisted he was a sound, able-bodied man, and entirely free from rheumatism, and did a big day's work. He then worked in stone quarries and did hard, manual labor. When I met him in 1866 he was afflicted with rheumatism, and was badly used up. I was quite intimate with him from 1866 to 1869, and also from 1873 until the present, and I know that during all this time he had the rheumatism, and it had gradually increased in severity."

Every year since discharge is covered by affidavit after affidavit of like character, but which we deem it unnecessary to quote.

The examining board at Muscatine, Iowa, February 4, 1885, gives the following as result of examination:

"There are no evidences of rheumatism. He has paralysis agitans in both arms, which he says has troubled him since his discharge. This man may have rheumatism, but we find no physical evidence of the disability other than he walks as though he was stiff in the hips."

The Davenport board, on November 5, 1885, says:

"We find no evidence of rheumatism; the joints are normal and there is no change in the heart. He suffers from paralysis agitans, which he claims has continued ever since his Army service. He is probably unable to earn a subsistence by manual labor. In the opinion of the board there is some spinal change in this case; if he attempts to talk fast he stutters."

His hospital record shows that he was treated in hospital for lumbago.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment striking out all after the words "United States," in line 6, and substituting the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARIA WALKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6311) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Maria Walker.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Mr. Chairman, I move that that bill be laid aside, as the gentleman who has charge of it is not present, and I know that he desires to make a speech upon it.

The motion was agreed to.

MARGARET LUCY.

The next business on the private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7511) granting a pension to Margaret Lucy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HAYDEN] who introduced this bill would make a statement of the reasons for granting a pension in this case.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple matter. This George Lucy enlisted in 1861 and was killed at White Oak Swamp in 1862. At the time he was killed his father was living, but he had been an invalid for a number of years, and the son was carrying on the business. The father died in 1863, and at the settlement of the estate there was a small amount of money left, something like a thousand dollars, and the widow has been dependent ever since upon her children, the estate having of course been exhausted in a very short time. This case was presented to the Pension Office in 1864, and it was decided in 1883 adversely.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would ask if this bill carries arrears?

Mr. PETTIBONE. I think not.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let the bill be read again.

The bill was again read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to strike out the words "and for arrears of pension."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I should say in justice to myself that I understood that those words had been stricken out. I did not know that they were in the bill.

Mr. SWOPE. We may have neglected to strike them from the bill, but the report will show that they were to be stricken out.

Mr. CONGER. The report in this case must certainly suggest an amendment striking out the arrears. I am sure that no such bill as this with the arrears in passed our committee.

Mr. STEELE. The report does show that that amendment was recommended.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM F. CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4386) granting an increase of pension to William F. Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William F. Clark, formerly of the First Connecticut Cavalry, and allow him a pension at the rate of $45 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us hear the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 4386, beg leave to submit the following report:

William F. Clark enlisted September 17, 1862, in Company A, First Regiment Connecticut Cavalry, and was discharged for disability May 29, 1865. His name is borne upon the pension-roll at the rate of $24 per month by certificate No. 46677. He now asks that his pension may be increased and bases his claim upon increase of disabilities, for which he is now pensioned, resulting from gunshot wounds received in the service, as follows, as described and sworn to by John M. Tabor, M. D., of Hartford, Conn., who made an examination of claimant at said Hartford on the 15th of March, 1886. In his affidavit Dr. Tabor says:

"I was called professionally to visit the petitioner, William L. Clark, and after a thorough examination I found the following wounds:

"No. 1. Entered and destroyed the joint made by the articulation of the first metatarsal and the internal cuneiform bones.

"No. 2. Entered on external side of ankle, just above oscalsis, left leg.

"No. 3. Same as above (No. 2), except that the point of entrance is on internal side of ankle.

"No. 4. Entered 3 inches above No. 2.

"No. 5. Entered just below and to the right of the occipital protuberance; this caused a fracture of the occipital bone; the point of fracture easily found.

"No. 6. Entered left axilla, passing up, caused fracture of first rib and clavicle on left side, which are now joined as one bone. The extremity of the internal part of the rib is above and internal to the clavicle, to which it is joined. The ball was removed from the right cervical region.

"No. 7. Entered just above and to left of sacrum, passed up and to the right; removed from under right scapula through an incision to the left of same.

"No. 8. External side of left thigh, in the lower third. This wound caused much sloughing.

"No. 9. External side of left thigh, on middle third; removed from same opening.

"No. 10. One inch above No. 9, passed through, splintering of femur.

"No. 11. Entered posterior middle third of thigh; removed from same opening.

"No. 12. Entered posterior upper third of thigh; removed from same opening. This wound is still open and discharging.

"No. 13. One inch above No. 12; still open and discharging.

"No. 14. Two inches above No. 13; still open and discharging.

"No. 15. One inch to the right of No. 14; open and discharging.

"No. 16. Left lower glutial region, about 2 inches to the left of No. 15s line.

"No. 17. Entered between left third and fourth ribs, passing through left lung, and removed from a point between third and fourth dorsal vertebra, 2 inches to left of spinous process. This wound has caused almost complete hepatization of left lung.

"I find almost total paralysis of left arm, forearm, and hand, and think the time is near at hand when there will be total paralysis of left side."

Thomas Simmonds, M. D., of Hartford, Conn., testifies, March 29, 1886—

"That William F. Clark has called at my office and laboratory for treatment and advice. I found him the worst wounded man that I have examined or prescribed for since the war; he has seventeen wounds on his body, four of which are in the left thigh and are now open and discharging.

"The left forearm and hand are numb and almost entirely useless; hearing of the left ear is entirely gone, and sight of the left eye badly impaired, so much so that objects are not discernible. The left lung is also badly affected, and acute pains are felt in the region of the heart. The left lower limb is entirely useless, necrosis of the bone having taken place. I give as my opinion that he is liable to paralysis of left side, which would result fatally."

John H. Moody, M. D., of Deep River, Conn., testifies to about the same line of facts, as also George C. Jarvis, of Hartford, Conn., who was United States pension examining surgeon, department of Connecticut, from 1868 to 1884, before whom in that time claimant came for examination. He testifies:

"Claimant had the largest number of wounds of any soldier that came before me for examination, and was the worst wounded soldier in Connecticut who survived the war. The manner in which he received the majority of his wounds and his miraculous escape from death inspired me with special interest in his particular case. I pronounced him then totally unfit for labor of any kind, and gave as my opinion that his disabilities caused by the wounds would become chronic and incurable. His present condition substantiates my opinion given at the time."

The remarkable story of the incurrence of these wounds deserves more than passing notice at the hands of your committee, and is as follows:

On the "Wilson raid," so called, he was wounded June 28, 1864, in the back of the head in the attempt to break through the right flank of the confederate army. On the following day during a charge at Stoney Creek, Virginia, he received a wound in the left foot, while mounted upon his captain's pack mule, two horses having been shot from under him. The following morning, the mule being much jaded and unable to keep up, he was ordered by his major, commanding regiment, to go on ahead of the command; by 10 o'clock the command came up to him and passed him, and at length he found himself in with a column of three or four thousand colored refugees, who had deserted their homes and joined the expedition.

At a certain point the road curved, and he was ordered by General Wilson to cut across lots to the head of the column and join his regiment, which he said was in advance.

This he proceeded to do, coming out on the road some half a mile ahead of the column; here he was halted and captured by fourteen of the enemy's dismounted cavalry, and was quickly hurried into the thick woods to the rear.

After Wilson's command had passed, leaving one man as a guard over him, the remainder returned to the road and picked up and brought back a private in the Fifth New York Cavalry, and a colored man. Later in the day the confederates took up their line of march, and, as he supposed, for prison. Penetrating the thick wood, they came upon a bridle path, which was followed for some distance.

Suddenly one of the guards, after a few angry words, shot the colored man from the rear through the head near the ear, killing him instantly. The Fifth New York man was next to fall, shot in a similar manner as the colored man. Seeing all were destined to the same fate, soldier sprang to the left in hopes of placing some of the large trees between himself and the confederates; but his movement was not quick enough, and he received two balls in the lower left limb, which felled him to the ground. The confederates then came up and at a very close range inflicted the remainder of the wounds. As many as twenty rounds must have been fired at him. The last shot penetrated the left breast, rendering him unconscious, and was fired in such close proximity that the powder from the muzzle of the gun burned the clothing. The shooting occurred, as near as he could judge, about 5 p. m. He lay in an unconscious state until after sun-up the following morning. With returning consciousness came indescribable suffering from pain and thirst.

After several ineffectual attempts to get upon his knees, he began to crawl toward the two dead men, in the hope of securing water from their canteens, but, to his great disappointment, neither canteen nor water was found. Remembering having crossed a brook while under guard just previous to the shooting, he began again to crawl to the rear on his right side, dragging his left side, which was perforated with holes, after him. Only a few feet at a time could be traveled, as his wounds began to bleed afresh. The whole of the day, into early evening, was consumed, although the distance was not over 40 rods. At length, almost exhausted from his long and painful effort, he reached the brook, and in his eagerness he crawled into it, allowing his whole body to be submerged while he drank. So refreshing was the draught it infused new life into him. Crawling upon the bank he took a long rest, and in making the attempt found he could get upon his knees but not upon his feet, for the bone of the lower left limb had been splintered and otherwise weakened by the gunshot wounds. And now occurred to this wounded, bleeding hero one of those remarkable interpositions of a Divine Providence, which, exhausted as he was, he nevertheless had the wit and undaunted courage, despite his desperate condition, to avail himself of.

While lying upon the bank an old, jaded, cast-off cavalry horse which had escaped shooting by the rear guard by leaving the road, came through the woods and approached the brook where he lay for a drink. Seeing soldier upon the ground he came up and smelled of him. Seizing him with the right hand by the forelock, he succeeded in pulling himself up to a standing position; he next unfastened his suspenders, and with his right hand and teeth made a noose secure to the under jaw. The horse, nearly as feeble as himself, was now allowed to drink, and then fastened to a shrub near by. After resting a while he began making the attempt to mount. By crawling as before he led the animal to the trunk of a fallen tree and secured him alongside, and then crawled out on the tree, which was on a level with the animal's back, where he was secured. Several unsuccessful attempts were made to mount or crawl from the tree to the horse's back, in two of which he was precipitated to the ground with much pain.

At length gaining the animal's back, he urged him forward, trusting in God, let him take his own course, which he did with feeble, faltering steps. After some time he brought out of the woods on the main road over which General Wilson's cavalry had passed, the line of march being marked by dead horses, shot by the rear guard to prevent their being picked up by the enemy and recruited. After continuing on the road a mile or more he saw a house on the left which was lighted up, through the windows of which he saw persons moving around. Worn and exhausted he turned into the yard, where he was greeted by the inevitable cur dog, which barked and snapped viciously at him, the noise of which attracted the attention of the people in the house, who came out, and to whom he disclosed his plight, whereupon the man of the house ordered two of his colored men to lift him from the horse, after which he was given some bread and milk. Learning that the Union lines were only some 4 miles from the house, and that he was on the right road, he determined to make the attempt to reach them, but on again being lifted upon the animal's back he found it impossible to retain his seat; all his strength had been exhausted in making the journey thus far, and he was so weak he could not sit upright. So he was allowed to be carried by the colored men to the piazza of the house, where he remained through the night.

In the morning the old horse was hitched into a two-wheel dump-cart, the only vehicle in the neighborhood, the body of which was filled with straw, and in this manner he was carried into the Federal lines, to Fort Powhatan, on the James River. Here he was received and kindly cared for, although in his sworn statement he says:

"I judged from what I heard the surgeon say to his attendant and from the chaplain's daily visits to my bedside that he deemed it useless in my hopeless condition to inflict further pain by attempting to remove the bullets from my body."

About the 7th of July he was transferred to Chesapeake officers' hospital, he being the only private soldier in the hospital. Here his wounds received the best of care, and several balls were removed. During his stay in this hospital the Russian fleet came into Hampton Roads, and the officers visited the hospital in a body. They were allowed to examine soldier's wounds, and they pronounced the case one of the most miraculous escapes from death they had ever heard of.

With returning strength he was carried to his home in Connecticut, where he now resides, but he has never been able to do any labor.

The evidence discloses that he was a young man of unusual nerve and daring, often doing the duty of scout; in fact, in any place where pluck and courage were needed he might be found.

William H. Bishop, a member of claimant's company, in an affidavit, testifies, after speaking of soldier's capture:

"I did not hear from him again until I heard from the hospital to which he made his way in spite of the many wounds he had received. When the communication was received, the captain (Jacob B. Rogers) formed the company in line and read aloud to us the shooting and miraculous escape of young Clark. Clark was faithful, willing, and brave. I remember in particular the battle of Ashland, Va., a short time prior to the Wilson raid, when the confederates, in overwhelming numbers, came into our rear in the woods and nearly surrounded our regiment. On this occasion Clark greatly distinguished himself for his daring and bravery. Again on the Wilson raid, at Ream's Station, Va., when Wilson's cavalry, after a long and tedious raid through the enemy's country, were beset by overwhelming numbers from Lee's army and routed, he was one of the thirty Connecticut cavalrymen who rallied and held the confederates in check until the Fifth New York Cavalry could form on the bank of Stony Creek and Wilson's disorganized division pass over. This I know, for we were together at the time, separated from our command, and fighting largely on our own hook, and we did not leave this position until we fell back with the Fifth New York Cavalry.

"I also remember on this same raid the said Clark was on the 'forlorn hope' detailed to burn the Roanoke River bridge under fire of the enemy's infantry and artillery on the other side of the river. In fact I do not remember any place where pluck, energy, and dash were required that he was not found up to the time of his being wounded."

N. A. Bosworth, of Hartford, Conn., sergeant in claimant's company, testifies as follows:

"On the Wilson raid said Clark was wounded and had two horses shot from under him. I missed him at the time and supposed he was dead. Never saw him again until after the war; he was then suffering from the many wounds he received at this time. His capture, the shooting, and escape were probably the most remarkable adventures of any soldier in the service. The facts of the same are familiar to me, not only from my personal association with him since the time, but from the many publications of incidents relating to the same. His present condition (1886) is almost helpless. He is confined to bed most of the time and in general is the wreck of one of the brightest, strongest, and bravest soldiers in our regiment."

Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, writing from Fort Snelling under date of March 12, 1886, to Mr. Clark, says:

"I have never heard of a more painful case of barbarity and suffering than yours. Beyond question the country should do all that by money it can do to make your remaining years years of ease. I can not doubt that if the facts are properly presented to it, Congress will respond generously to your appeal."

Your committee are of opinion that the recital of the facts in the case sufficiently establishes its merits for increase over his present rating of $24 per month. The rate of $50 per month is allowed by the general laws to that class of our wounded soldiers who are in that condition of absolute utter helplessness requiring the constant care and attention of another person. These absolute conditions are not present in this case, but they are so imminent that claimant has to exercise the greatest care to avoid such results.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the claimant is entitled to that degree of pecuniary relief as shall materially aid and assist him in a proper care of himself in his few remaining days, believing that he has richly earned this right.

Your committee report back the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage with the following amendments: In the sixth line strike out the word "eighty" and substitute therefor the words "forty-five;" also, in the same line, the word "including," and all thereafter in the bill, and substitute therefor the following: "in lieu of the pension now received by him."

Mr. GUENTHER (before the reading of the report was concluded). I move that the further reading of this report be dispensed with.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I object. I want to know how awfully this man was wounded. I remember that in the closing hours of the Forty-fifth Congress a distinguished gentleman from New York moved to take up a pension bill and pass it because the soldier was "thoroughly wounded in every particular." I think this is an analogous case. The Clerk had got as far as wound "No. 11." I hope he will go on.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the Clerk finish the reading of the report.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, let us have the rest of it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report, but was interrupted by

Mr. DOCKERY, who said: Mr. Chairman, I called for the reading of this report. I certainly have heard all I want to hear, and do not insist on the further reading.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the further reading of the report will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARIAH E. A. B. NOWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1148) granting a pension to Mariah E. A. B. Nowell

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of Mariah E. A. B. Nowell, and to pay her a pension during her life of $12 a month, for her important services to the country during the late civil war.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the report, when

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, said: If the clerk is proceeding to read upon the demand which I made some time ago, I withdraw it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the reports in all these cases where the reading is not called for be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NEECE. There is no reason for putting these reports in the RECORD. They are already printed, so that everybody who wishes can get them.

Mr. STEELE. Let them go into the RECORD, so that it may show the reasons on which we act in passing the bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the Committee of the Whole has no right to order the printing of reports which are not read. The House might have the right, but not the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROWELL. This is done almost every night when we are considering these pension cases. It certainly can be done by unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that in all these cases the report of the committee be printed as if read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. SWOPE. I shall object, because the reports are already printed and are accessible to every member. I see no occasion at all for lumbering the RECORD with the repetition of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] is objected to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is the reading of the report on the pending bill called for? The Chair understands that it is not.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH E. BASSETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1152) granting a pension to Sarah E. Bassett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Bassett, daughter of Julius Bassett, late captain of Company A, Fifteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMELINE J. BABSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1065) granting a pension to Emeline J. Babson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Emeline J. Babson, widow of Erastus W. Babson, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the rules and regulations of the Department, the same to begin from and after the date of his death.

Mr. DOCKERY. This bill, as read, carries arrears.

Mr. STEELE. I suppose there is no objection to striking out that clause.

Mr. MORRILL. The concluding part of the report will show whether the committee has recommended an amendment to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the reading of the report called for?

Mr. PETERS. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 1065, respectfully report that they have examined the same and report it back, adopting the Senate report as its own, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The claimant is the widow of Erastus W. Babson, late Company A, Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers, for whose relief a bill granting a pension passed the Senate during the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress. Before the bill was finally acted on the claimant died. The preponderance of evidence is that he died from the disease contracted in the service.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The report made from this committee in favor of the bill granting a pension to the husband was as follows:

[Senate report No. 362, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 772) granting a pension to Erastus W. Babson, have considered the same and report:

The claimant, Erastus W. Babson, enlisted in Company A, Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers, September 24, 1862, and served until discharged, July 29, 1863. He applied for a pension, alleging that at or near Liverpool Point, Maryland, about December 7, 1862, he was ruptured in left side, while on a long march through the mud from Camp Casey, near Fairfax Seminary, to Fredericksburg. He was armorer, with the wagons containing ammunition and army stores, and incurred the disability in helping to lift the army wagons out of the mud.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Office because the records of the War Department fail to show the existence of hernia in the service, and the parol evidence was deemed insufficient to establish origin in line of duty.

The claimant on oath alleges that he was a sound man when he enlisted, and this is corroborated by Dr. Ossian Sumner, who knew him for five years prior to enlistment, had prescribed for him, and knows he had no rupture; also by two acquaintances who had worked with him and one of whom had been in bathing with him; also by the captain of his company, and two comrades who had opportunities of knowing the facts before and after his enlistment.

The claimant swears that he incurred a rupture as above stated; that he was treated by Surgeons Carpenter and King, but was not in a hospital, and that he got along as best he could till a year after his discharge, when his hernia grew worse, and he then consulted physicians, and has since been treated and worn a truss.

Surgeon Carpenter is dead. Surgeon King makes affidavit that he remembers treating Babson for some injury in his tent about February, 1863, but has no record of and can not remember what it was. That is the extent of the medical evidence as to origin in line of duty.

Corporal Tillinghast, of claimant's company, tented with him, and remembers that about December 7, 1862, after a long march through the mud, claimant showed affiant a rupture in left side of abdomen, incurred in said march. Tillinghast was not with Babson on the march, but knows he must have incurred the rupture at that time. Comrade Thurber distinctly remembers that one night about December 7 or 9, before reaching Fredericksburg, claimant, who was tenting with him, complained for the first time of a strain, and that he felt a "giving way" in the lower part of the belly, and, with his hands on that part, said he was "busted up." Comrade Richards swears that in the latter part of December, 1862, after the battle of Fredericksburg, claimant told him that he had a rupture in the left side, incurred on the march just before that battle, and showed a swelling of unnatural appearance on the left lower side of the belly. Comrade Leach was detailed to assist Babson as armorer about the last of December, 1862, and was then shown the rupture and told it was incurred on the hard, muddy march just before the battle of Fredericksburg, which he believes, as he knew claimant since and before his enlistment.

Two physicians testify to treating the claimant since March, 1880, for hernia, left side, which disables him from manual labor in a large degree. The examining board rated his disability in 1881 at one-half.

The Pension Office, not satisfied with the proof submitted, detailed a special examiner in April, 1883, to proceed to the home of the claimant and examine fully into the case in order to determine its merits. A large amount of testimony was taken, and the examiner concluded his report by saying:

"If Mr. Tillinghast, whose reputation for truth is well vouched for, on cross-examination sustains all that he has said in his affidavit, I shall be of opinion that the case should be admitted."

Mr. Tillinghast, living at a distance, was cross-examined by another agent very critically, and admitted that he did not see the breach until about the time they were discharged, but did see it then. Otherwise his former evidence was not materially impeached, and his reputation for truth is admitted to be good.

Since the rejection by the Pension Office, the affidavit of Colonel Browne, of claimant's regiment, was filed, in which he states as follows:

"I remember that soon after our arrival at Falmouth, opposite Fredericksburg, Va., about December 9, 1862, claimant came to me and complained that he had ruptured himself on the march from Washington there, and I referred him to Surgeon Carpenter. Babson, being so faithful and useful a man, I inquired of Surgeon Carpenter (who is now dead) about Babson's complaint, and the surgeon told me that Babson had ruptured himself and that I must favor him, which I did after that. I remember these facts distinctly, because I was troubled lest I should lose Babson's services in taking care of the arms of the regiment. * * * I feel if any one is entitled to a pension on account of faithful and conscientious services and disabilities incurred in the Army, Babson ought to have one."

Your committee are of opinion that the evidence satisfactorily shows that the claimant contracted the disability, which still continues, in the service and in line of duty, and therefore report back the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PETERS. I call attention to the fact that this report contains no recommendation by the committee that the provision for arrears be struck out.

Mr. CONGER. I remember this case very well. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] who drew this report is not present to-night; but I know that the order of the committee was that the bill be so amended. I presume that recommendation was omitted through an oversight of the gentleman who drew the report.

Mr. CUTCHEON (to Mr. CONGER). Make the motion now.

Mr. CONGER. I move that so much of the bill as would carry arrearages be stricken out.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I would like to know how the bill would read as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment had better be reduced to writing.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill strike out the words "date of his death" and insert "passage of this act;" so as to read, "from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. STEELE and Mr. PETERS. That makes it right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SWOPE. In deference to the views of several gentlemen with whom I have consulted, I withdraw my objection to printing in the RECORD the reports which are not read. It has been suggested to me that it will be a convenience to members and others in looking over the RECORD to see the report in immediate connection with the bill to which it relates. For the purpose of putting in the RECORD full information of the reasons for our action in these cases, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. NEECE. I renew the objection. These reports, which are very numerous, are accessible in the document-room to every person who desires to investigate the cases, and I do not think the RECORD should be encumbered unnecessarily by printing them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. NEECE] renews the objection.

ELEANOR C. BANGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1582) for the relief of Eleanor C. Bangham, returned from the Senate with the following amendment:

Strike out, in line 4, "de novo;" so it will read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eleanor C. Bangham, widow of John S. Bangham, late a private in Company M, First Regiment New York Light Artillery.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

SILAS S. WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1398) to grant a pension to Silas S. White, returned from the Senate with the following amendment: Add at the end of the bill "at the rate of $18 per month;" so it will read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Silas S. White, late a private in Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment of New York Volunteers, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $18 per month.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Is there any reason why that amendment should be adopted?

Mr. MORRILL. This and the next case are of two old men. The House passed bills for their relief, providing they should be granted pensions subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws. The Senate fixed the rate as these men were old and disabled, and the rate which was fixed is a reasonable one. The Committee on Invalid Pensions unanimously concurred in those amendments.

I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

SIMMONS W. HARDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1406) granting a pension to Simmons W. Harden, returned from the Senate with the following amendment:

Add at the end of the bill "at the rate of $16 per month;" so it will read:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of Simmons W. Harden, late a private in Company L, First Regiment of Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $16 per month."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

GEORGE W. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5254) to increase the pension of George W. Smith, returned from the Senate with the following amendment:

Strike out "sixteen" and insert "twenty-four;" so it will read:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to increase the pension of George W. Smith, late of Company F, Fortieth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers, to $24 per month."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

JOHN MINGUS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8325) for the relief of John Mingus.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay John Mingus, a pensioner of the war of 1812, North Carolina troops, the amount of money retained by the Department out of the pension-money falling due him since his restoration to the rolls by act of March 9, 1878, to reimburse the Government for the amount which he drew as a pensioner of the war of 1812 during the period from February 4, 1871, to September 3, 1877, which amount was disallowed on account of alleged disloyalty during the rebellion.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. COWLES) was read, as follows:

Your committee have had under consideration House bill 8001, and submit the accompanying substitute for the bill, and recommend the adoption of the same.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The report which has been read does not give any information in regard to the bill. If any one can give us any such information I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Pensions had this case under consideration. The bill read by the Clerk is the one reported by the Committee on Pensions in the nature of a substitute for the original bill introduced and referred by the House to that committee.

The facts were these. John Mingus had been a pensioner of the war of 1812. There was no doubt of his service. The proof was ample and complete that he served for the period of two years, at the end of which time he was discharged at Norfolk.

In 1871 he was restored to the pension-roll and drew his pension until some time in 1877, when he was dropped from the pension-roll on account of alleged disloyalty to the Government.

In 1878 Congress passed a law which made it unnecessary to prove loyalty to the Government. He had obtained his pension by proof of loyalty, but on subsequent testimony, which was taken, it was shown he had furnished some clothing to his own son in the army of the Confederate States.

The old man himself never engaged in the war at all. He was sixty-seven years of age when the war began. He is now in an advanced age. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] The Committee on Pensions, after considering all the facts, came to the conclusion to report the bill which has been read and urge its passage.

Several MEMBERS. That is all right.

Mr. COWLES. I move then that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to, and it was so ordered.

THOMAS TEGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3047) granting a pension to Thomas Tegan.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Tegan, late a private in Company I, Thirty-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELISE BURKI.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 843) granting a pension to Elise Burki.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elise Burki, widow of John Burki, late captain of Company E, Fifteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HARRIET M. RIDER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 963) granting a pension to Harriet M. Rider.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriet M. Rider, widow of Van Ransalaer Rider, late a corporal of Company K, Third Regiment Iowa Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RICHARD GEAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3921) granting an increase of pension to Richard Gear, with Senate amendment.

The amendment of the Senate is as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the words "to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

MRS. J. E. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5656) granting a pension to Mrs. J. E. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. J. E. Davis, widow of Dr. J. E. Davis, late assistant surgeon of the Twenty-seventh Regiment of Michigan Volunteers.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out the name "Mrs. J. E. Davis," in the sixth line, and insert "Marguret S. Davis."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

KATHARINA NICKERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7513) granting a pension to Katharine Nickert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Katharine Nickert, widow of Jacob Nickert, late of Company C, First New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension after the passage of this act.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Change the name "Katharine" to "Katharina;" and after the words "New York," in line 7, insert "cavalry;" so that it will read "New York Cavalry Volunteers."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DANIEL J. BINGMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3501) granting a pension to Daniel J. Bingman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel J. Bingman, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LOUIS A. WOLLENWEBER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6248) granting a pension to Louis A. Wollenweber.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louis A. Wollenweber, father of Louis A. Wollenweber, deceased, late a private in Company K, Ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY I. CARTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6566) granting a pension to Henry I. Cartin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry I. Cartin, late a private in Company C, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES T. IRWIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3640) granting a pension to James T. Irwin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James T. Irwin, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7401) granting a pension to Samuel Miller.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Miller, late a private in Company C, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LOREN BURRITT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8002) to increase the pension of Loren Burritt, reported adversely from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to increase the pension of Loren Burritt, late lieutenant-colonel of the Eighth Regiment United States Colored Troops, to $100 a month.

Mr. SWOPE. I ask that the report in this case, being an adverse report, be read.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) is as follows:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of Loren Burritt, late lieutenant-colonel Eighth Regiment, United States Colored Volunteers, from $72 per month, which he is now receiving, to $100 per month.

The condition of this soldier is one of entire helplessness. He is confined to the bed, and unable to move or help himself; for although he can move his arms to some extent, he has little use of them. He has to be lifted, turned, fed, and have every office done for him by another. He requires a constant attendant day and night. The disease has, besides, nearly destroyed his eyesight, the sight of the right eye being gone entirely and that of the left much impaired. It has also affected the functions of the bowels and bladder so that he has no control over their actions. While the disease has thus destroyed the power of motion, it has not much impaired sensation, so that at times he suffers the most intense agony.

Your committee fully recognize the distressing character of this case and do not see how it would be possible for it to be much worse. He is, however, in receipt now of a pension of $72 per month, which ought to be sufficient for his own support and that of his family. Congress can not undertake, and indeed it would be impossible to reimburse the soldiers of the country for the sufferings and disabilities which they may have incurred in its defense. No amount of money could do that in many cases, of which this is a marked one. It can only distribute among them such pecuniary assistance as each case may seem to require. There are many cases just as helpless and requiring as much attention as this one, and were the relief asked for granted in this instance it might reasonably be looked for in all.

Your committee for these considerations feel compelled to report adversely, and to ask that this bill lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table?

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that the committee saw fit to report this case unfavorably, because I am satisfied the Congress of the United States never had a more meritorious case before it than this.

Loren Burritt was a young man just passing his majority when he entered the Army of the United States as a private soldier in the Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania Regiment. He served with that regiment in the Army of the Potomac, taking part in all its important and sanguinary battles up to 1863, when he was singled out and made lieutenant-colonel of one of the colored regiments in the service, and while leading that regiment in battle he received a wound that disabled him, the wound being in the foot, and while being taken off the field he received another wound in the other foot.

From these two wounds he never has recovered, and after the war he went back to his home in the North, disabled as he was, read law and was admitted to the bar, went to Philadelphia and was about to enter upon a career that would have eventually made him one of the most conspicuous men in Pennsylvania, but in 1872 the effect of these wounds was so terrible upon him, that he was stricken with paralysis, and since 1873 has not been able to answer the calls of nature. That poor man has lain upon his back at his poor home since 1872, Mr. Chairman, unable even to feed himself, all the calls of nature having to be attended to for him by his poor wife, and she is now almost at death's door, having worn herself out in ministering to his care. I ask here now in the name of the great people of the United States that a pension of $100 shall be given to this poor man, who can at most but live a short period, perhaps for a single year. And will the Congress of the United States say "no," that this is setting a precedent that it is hard to follow in the future? I say, gentlemen, you have already set the precedent and do not now go back in this case.

The present Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, receives a pension of $100 a month, and he occupies a place that gives him $5,000 a year, while Loren Burritt has laid upon his cot in the agonies of disease since 1872. Will you deny him this? Will you shut the door against him and say that he can not receive this small pittance? I appeal to you, gentlemen, as fellow-countrymen, as lovers of your flag, your country, and its destiny, give this poor man this increase. Do it in the name of honesty, in the name of patriotism, in the name of right. I plead for him, and ask you now to say that this bill shall pass.

Mr. BAYNE. How much does he get now?

Mr. OSBORNE. Seventy-two dollars a month.

Mr. BAYNE. And the bill proposes to give him $100?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes, sir. He requires attention all the time. He can not be left alone, and has not been left alone since 1872. He has nothing except his pension to depend upon; and $72 will not furnish him the necessary sustenance to support and protect himself and his family. I ask that this bill may be reported favorably.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee, which is that the bill do lie on the table.

The question being taken, the Chair stated that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. WINANS. I call for a division.

Mr. LAIRD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAIRD. How is the question to be taken?

The CHAIRMAN. An "ay" vote sustains the report of the committee. Those who are in favor of the bill vote "no" on this vote.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14. Before the negative vote was taken,

Mr. HAYNES said: I think there is a misunderstanding as to what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. An affirmative vote is against the bill, being to concur in the recommendation of the committee that it be laid upon the table. A negative vote is in favor of the bill. If the negative vote prevails it will be followed by another motion.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing now. If there be no objection the vote will be taken over again.

Mr. NEECE. I desire to make a brief explanation with reference to this bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. NEECE. As I am informed—and this bill was considered in the Committee on Invalid Pensions, of which I am a member—this gentleman is already drawing a pension of $72 a month. He asks by this bill to have it increased to $100. The committee came to the conclusion that we could not afford to grant the increase. The fact is that soldiers laboring under entire disability receive only $50 a month.

Mr. PERKINS. Under existing law, does not a man who has lost both legs receive $72 a month?

Mr. NEECE. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Does not a man who has lost both arms receive $72 a month? Does not a man who has lost both eyes receive $72? And is not this man infinitely worse off than any one of those I have suggested?

Mr. NEECE. I think not.

Mr. PERKINS. He has virtually lost all his senses. He has lost his sight. He has lost his sense of touch. He has lost the use of his limbs.

Mr. OSBORNE. He has lost the sight of one eye and the other is going.

Mr. NEECE. He has one eye left with which he can see. If we grant $100 a month in this case there will ten thousand applications for an increase of pensions on similar grounds in the next Congress.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

The question being taken; there were—ayes 25, noes 16.

Mr. WINANS. No quorum. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WINANS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OSBORNE] will please act as tellers.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is no use in having a vote by tellers. It is manifest there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent be given that a yea-and-nay vote be taken on this bill in a full House. Then if Congress by a full vote refuses to set a precedent of this sort under the circumstances that settles it.

Mr. COWLES. That is fair enough.

Mr. MORRILL. And let the previous question be ordered.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That can not be done in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The previous question can be ordered in the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] asks unanimous consent that this bill be reported, with the understanding that it shall not be acted on to-night, and that a vote be taken by yeas and nays in a full House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

LEWIS F. CASEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar under the special order was the bill (H. R. 8329) to relieve Lewis F. Casey, of Illinois, of disabilities under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Lewis F. Casey of the State of Illinois is hereby relieved of all disabilities imposed upon him by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

REBECCA ELDRIDGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2145) for the relief of Rebecca Eldridge, with a Senate amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to have the name of Rebecca Eldridge, as widow of Wilber H. Eldridge, late of Company G, First Maine Heavy Artillery, placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $8 per month, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 6, strike out "$8 per month" and insert "$12 per month."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

ANNA KESSINGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 504) granting a pension to Anna Klessinger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Anna Klessinger, widow of Daniel F. Klessinger, late a private in Company A, Sixth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. This act to take effect from and after its passage.

The committee recommended an amendment changing, in the body of the bill and also in the title, the name of "Klessinger" to "Kessinger."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ABNER MOREHEAD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3304) to restore the name of Abner Morehead to the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Abner Morehead, late of Company K, One hundred and fifteenth Indiana Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY HAWHE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5232) for the relief of Mary Hawke.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Hawke, widow of Arthur J. Hawke, late lieutenant-colonel of the Forty-ninth Indiana Volunteers.

The committee recommended an amendment in the changing the name "Hawke," in the body of the bill, to "Hawhe," and a like amendment of the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH BARKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 977) granting a pension to Elizabeth Barker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Barker, widow of Henry Barker, who served in Capt. Paul French's company of Indiana militia during the early part of the war of 1812.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID W. HAMILTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1290) granting a pension to David W. Hamilton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David W. Hamilton, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES C. CHANDLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1630) granting a pension to James C. Chandler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James C. Chandler, late of Company A, Ninth Indiana Volunteers and Eleventh Indiana Cavalry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD AYERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 363) granting a pension to Edward Ayers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward Ayers, late of Company F, Fifty-first Indiana Veteran Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ISOM WILKERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1438) granting a pension to Isom Wilkerson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isom Wilkerson, late of Company I, Second California Cavalry Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DUDLEY B. BRANCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 857) granting a pension to Dudley B. Branch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dudley B. Branch, late of Company F, Seventh Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEVI L. TONGUE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7437) to grant a pension to Levi L. Vaughn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Levi L. Vaughn, late a private in Company I, of the Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7437) to increase the pension of Levi L. Tongue, having considered the same, report—

That said Levi L. Tongue enlisted May 1, 1861, and mustered into service in the Sixth Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, Company I, July 22, 1861. He served with his regiment and participated in all the battles of the war in which this regiment was engaged, and re-enlisted at the expiration of his term and returned to the regiment March, 1864; was engaged in the battle of the Wilderness and in all the battles to and including Petersburg of June, 1864. He fought in each engagement with conspicuous bravery. He was detailed by an order from headquarters Armies United States, City Point, June 17, 1864, to accompany Lieut. E. P. Brooks, adjutant of the Sixth Wisconsin, on a raid around the flank of the confederate army, to burn bridges, release prisoners, &c.; he was chosen for this service on account of his bravery and daring and coolness in battle; he was taken prisoner and held in Andersonville and Salisbury prisons, where he was taken sick by reason of the treatment he received, and was reduced to a skeleton, and lost his reason; in that condition he was exchanged at Wilmington, N. C., March, 1865, sent to hospital at Annapolis, Md., where he was paid nine months' pay and was furloughed, but was so demented that he did not remember that he had been a soldier, and in that condition was robbed of his pay.

His friends took him and by easy stages succeeded in getting him home. He has ever since been troubled with epilepsy. Was driving horses on a threshing-machine September, 1867, was seized with an epileptic fit and fell into the horse-power, and had his right ankle broken. He is pensioned for epilepsy $16 per month, and an application for an increase is refused on the injury to ankle for the reason that it was not incurred in line of duty. A much more serious disability resulting from his prison life is partial dementia or loss of power of connected thought and memory, whereby he is unfitted and incapacitated for the ordinary duties of life. His mental afflictions are far greater than his physical, and were the direct cause of his injury in the horse-power. Thus this brave soldier, who was conspicuous for his brave acts, is now almost an imbecile. Your committee think his misfortune is equal to, or greater than, the loss of a limb, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, amended so as to read "increase the pension of Levi L. Tongue, late private in Company I, Sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of the pension he now receives."

The committee recommended amendments making the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Levi L. Tongue, late a private in Company I of the Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

Also amending the title so as to read: "A bill to increase the pension of Levi L. Tongue."

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HATCH). If there be no objection this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 8, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an additional estimate by the commissioners of the District of Columbia for buildings for public schools for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, supplementary lists of claims allowed under appropriations of which balances are exhausted or carried to the surplus fund; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY FOR PRINTING AND BINDING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Public Printer, and submitting an estimate and requesting an appropriation to supply a deficiency for public printing and binding for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OLCOTT HARBOR, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers submitting an additional estimate for repairs and works at Olcott Harbor, New York, rendered necessary by damages caused by recent storms; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT FUND OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, asking that in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill provision be made to determine definitely whether discretion rests with the Attorney-General in the expenditure of the contingent fund of the Department of Justice, and to decide what articles are necessary for the use of that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

Mr. HEARD, until Wednesday next, on account of important business.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, for a few days, to attend a funeral.
Mr. FLEEGER, for six days, on account of important business.
To Mr. KELLEY, until the 13th instant.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. House Executive Document 198, the Chair finds, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and House Executive Document 214 to the Committee on Military Affairs. These documents should have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. If there be no objection a change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 606) authorizing the removal of the statue of Maj. Gen. John A. Rawlins from its present location to a site to be selected by the Secretary of War; and

A bill (H. R. 661) granting the right of way through the Fort Selden military reservation in New Mexico to Rio Grande, Mexico and Pacific Railroad Company.

FOREIGN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to present and have printed a letter sent to me by the Superintendent of Foreign Mails, in answer to a request I made for information on a question that will come before us in a few days in relation to subsidies for the foreign mail service on an amendment of the Senate. The communication contains a great deal of information, and the superintendent asked me to have it printed, as there are many members writing to him and it is impossible for him to answer in each case.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the communication printed in the RECORD?

Mr. MILLS. No, sir; I desire to have it printed as a document.

Mr. BURROWS. What is the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MILLS. I desire to have printed as a document a communication from the Superintendent of Foreign Mails, giving information on the subject of subsidies for the foreign mail service, which will be found valuable when the discussion of this question comes up.

Mr. BURROWS. By whose request was it prepared?

Mr. MILLS. The communication is addressed to me by the Superintendent of the Foreign Mail Service.

Mr. BURROWS. In reply to what?

Mr. MILLS. In reply to a verbal communication I made to him asking information as to the extent of the service, the amounts paid, and all such matters.

There was no objection, and the communication was ordered to be printed as a document.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT AND GULF RAILROAD.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and that the same be brought before the House for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company near and south of the city of Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas, and running thence by the most practicable route through the Indian Territory to the northwest corner of the State of Arkansas, and after passing through the counties of Benton and Washington, in the State of Arkansas, to the town of Evansville, in the said county of Washington; thence from the said town of Evansville, through the Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, to the city of Fort Smith, in the said State of Arkansas, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turnouts, branches, sidings, and extensions as said company may deem it to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory, and to take and use a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations, for every 10 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

SEC. 3. That before said railway shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of said Cherokee Nation or tribe through which it may be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees, to be appointed, one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said railroad company, who, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall take and subscribe, before a district judge, clerk of a district court, or United States commissioner, an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned, with their award, to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof; and a majority of said referees shall be competent to act in case of the absence of a member, after due notice. And upon the failure of either party to make such appointment within thirty days after the appointment made by the President, the vacancy shall be filled by the district judge of the court held at Fort Smith, Ark., upon the application of the other party. The chairman of said board shall appoint the time and place for all hearings, within the nation to which such occupant belongs. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $4 per day for each day they are engaged in the trial of any case submitted to them under this act, with mileage at 5 cents per mile. Witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nations. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award, and be paid by such railroad company. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after the making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the district court held at Fort Smith, Ark., which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition, according to the laws of the State in which the same shall be heard provided for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes. If upon the hearing of said appeal the judgment of the court shall be for a larger sum than the award of the referees, the costs of said appeal shall be adjudged against the railroad company. If the judgment of the court shall be for the same sum as the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the appellant. If the judgment of the court shall be for a smaller sum than the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages. When proceedings have been commenced in court, the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with the construction of the railroad.

SEC. 4. That said railroad company shall not charge the inhabitants of said Territory a greater rate of freight than the rate authorized by the laws of the State of Arkansas for services or transportation of the same kind: Provided, That passenger rates on said railway shall not exceed 3 cents per mile. Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines until a State government or governments shall exist in said Territory within the limits of which said railway, or a part thereof, shall be located; and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freights within their respective limits by said railway; but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railway or said company whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another, or shall extend into more than one State: Provided, however, That the rate of such transportation of passengers, local or interstate, shall not exceed the rate above expressed: And provided further, That said railway company shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the Cherokee Nation or tribe, the sum of $50, in addition to compensation provided for in this act for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway, for each mile of railway that it may construct in said Territory, said payments to be made in installments of $500 as each 10 miles of road is graded: Provided, That if the general council of said nation or tribe through whose lands said railway may be located shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location as set forth in section 6 of this act, dissent from the allowances provided for in this section, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupant of lands, with the right of appeal to the courts upon the same terms, conditions, and requirements as therein provided: Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision. Said company shall also pay, so long as said Territory is owned and occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said Territory. The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned by him, in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force between the United States and said Cherokee Nation, according to the number of miles of railway that may be constructed by said railway company through their lands: Provided, That Congress shall have the right, so long as said lands are occupied and possessed by said nation or tribe, to impose such additional taxes upon said railroad as it may deem just and proper for their benefit; and any Territory or State hereafter formed through which said railway shall have been established may exercise the like power as to such part of said railway as may lie within its limits. Said railway company shall have the right to survey and locate its railway immediately after the passage of this act.

SEC. 6. That said company shall cause maps showing the route of its located line through said Territory to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation or tribe through whose lands said railway may be located; and after the filing of said maps no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid as against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter, or such location shall be void; and said location shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior in sections of 25 miles before construction of any such section shall be begun.

SEC. 7. That the officers, servants, and employés of said company necessary to the construction and management of said road shall be allowed to reside, while so engaged, upon such right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws, and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with said intercourse laws.

SEC. 8. That the United States circuit and district courts for the western district of Arkansas, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress, shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies arising between said Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company and the nation and tribe through whose territory said railway shall be constructed. Said courts shall have like jurisdiction, without reference to the amount in controversy, over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of said nation or tribe and said railway company; and the civil jurisdiction of said courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian Territory, without distinction as to citizenship of the parties, so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That said railway company shall build at least 50 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

SEC. 10. That the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon the express condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian nation any further grant of land, or its occupancy, than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 11. That all mortgages executed by said railway company conveying any portion of its railroad, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian Territory, shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act; and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I would like to ask one question before unanimous consent is given. Is just as full right given in regard to lands held by the tribes as I notice in the first part of the bill is given to individual owners of lands?

Mr. PEEL. The bill is exactly in detail like two bills that were passed in the last Congress.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. From what committee does it come?

Mr. PEEL. From the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STRUBLE. I object.

Mr. BEACH. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. STRUBLE. Upon the representation that this bill is not likely to cause discussion I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PEEL. I will repeat that the bill is precisely in detail like two bills that were passed in the last Congress. This railroad only goes for some 30 miles across the northeast corner and some 30 miles across the southeast corner of the Indian Territory.

Mr. BEACH. I shall withdraw for the present the demand for the regular order. I do not object to this bill, but I give notice that hereafter I shall insist on the regular order till the public business is further advanced than it is at this time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. H. B. LEHMAN.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass a bill which I send to the Clerk's desk. The bill is on the Private Calendar. It is House bill No. 7364.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA] asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill indicated by him, and to put the bill upon its passage.

The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War may authorize the interment in the national cemetery at New Berne, in the State of North Carolina, of the remains of Harriet B. Lehman, deceased, widow of the late R. F. Lehman, whose remains are new interred in said cemetery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'HARA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BEACH. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

LOREN BURRITT.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the consideration of a bill coming over from last evening, upon which the previous question has been ordered. The question is upon the passage of the bill. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to increase the pension of Loren Burritt, late lieutenant-colonel of the Eighth Regiment United States Colored Troops, to $100 a month.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Friday next?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered upon it.

A MEMBER. Is it in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. This bill was reported adversely from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, but ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and the previous question was ordered upon its passage.

Mr. EDEN. Is it in order to have the report read?

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent. The Chair did not answer the inquiry whether a motion to lay on the table would be in order. That motion is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to move to recommit the bill to the committee?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make that motion.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I understood that this bill came over from last evening with the agreement that there should be fifteen minutes given to each side for its discussion. I now ask that that understanding be adhered to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OSBORNE] states that unanimous consent was given in the House last evening that this bill should be debated for thirty minutes, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does the gentleman state that the consent was given by the House or by the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It was given by the House, according to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would a motion to lay the bill on the table take precedence of that?

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I want to give notice that I shall object to this practice of bringing over private bills from the Friday evening sessions to take up time that ought to be devoted to public business, because I believe it is entirely against the spirit of the special order made by the House. The House did not intend that business of that character should be transferred from Friday evening to other days. If such agreements to carry over bills can be made by members who come here on Friday evenings, they can occupy in that way all the remainder of the session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OSBORNE] states that there was an agreement among the members present last evening that there should be thirty minutes allowed for debate upon this bill to-day. That was not stated to the House by the Chair, and was no part of the order which was made by the House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] now moves (as the Chair understands) to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not want to interfere with any agreement, and I therefore withdraw that motion, but I give notice that I shall oppose this practice hereafter.

Mr. MCMILLIN (to Mr. SPRINGER). Make your motion now.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OSBORNE] will proceed.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I will not occupy the time of the House to any great extent, my desire being simply to place before the House the circumstances of this case and the character of the man sought to be benefited by this bill. Loren Burritt, in whose behalf this bill was introduced, was in his boyhood days a friend and companion of mine, and I know him as I would know a brother. When he was a little past twenty-one years of age, having just come from college, he volunteered in the Army of the United States as a private soldier, and was enlisted in the Fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers. He served with that regiment through the campaigns upon the Peninsula, came back from there, went through the second battle of Bull Run, crossed the river into Maryland, and was at Antietam. Coming back from there, he was at Fredericksburg, then at Chancellorsville, and later at Gettysburg.

Coming back with Meade in the Army of the Potomac, he was selected as a man of conspicuous gallantry and exceeding bravery worthy of particular notice and he was made a lieutenant-colonel. In 1864, in Florida, while in battle at the head of his regiment, he was wounded in the ankle. While being taken from the field he was wounded in the other foot, and thus he became disabled in both feet. He was sent to the hospital and lingered there until 1866, when he was discharged on account of disability. He then went to his home in the North, read law, went to Philadelphia, started in a career that promised a most brilliant future, but, unfortunately, in 1872, his old wounds broke out and he was compelled to surrender all hopes of future earthly success and take to his bed. In 1873 he became totally disabled, and has been so from that time until now. He is unable to move on foot, to raise a hand; he is unable to feed himself; he can not be taken out of his bed; every office of nature that he has to perform he must have assistance in. He has thus lingered through these fourteen years with no means to rely upon after the first two or three years but his pension of $72 a month, and now his wife, worn out in caring for him and ministering to his wants, is likely to be taken from him. Thus he is left helpless.

I introduced this bill. In the presentation of this case I ask Congress to say that this man who served so gallantly and whose career came to so unfortunate an end is worthy of that distinction which is asked here; that his pension may be increased to the extent of the simple pittance of $28 a month. What will it amount to, gentlemen? It will scarcely amount to the sum of $300; for I do not believe it possible for this man to exist beyond the period of one year. Yet these last moments of his life are the time when more assistance is required to provide for his wants than at any previous period, especially since his poor wife is giving out, and he must now depend upon charity, or must suffer in that pitiable and painful state which I think should make the nerves of any true man shudder when he remembers that this poor sufferer lies constantly upon a cot, worse than dead, unable to use either arms or feet, and, more than that, blind in one eye. He has lost the sight in one eye, and with the other is unable to distinguish a friend across the room.

Is not this, then, a case that appeals to the patriotism of members of this House? Is not this a case which demands immediate present action? Is it not a case parallel at least with that case heretofore made of record. I refer to the case of the gallant General Black, the present Commissioner of Pensions, who receives to-day by act of Congress $100 a month for disability in both arms. Loren Burritt is not only disabled in both arms and both legs, but is unable to see, except dimly out of one eye.

This, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, is the appeal we make to you; and I ask you, in the name of everything that is honorable and sacred, to let me be able to telegraph upon the wings of electricity to that poor wife that the Congress of the United States has stood by her dear husband in this the hour of their direst distress, thus sending a little ray of sunshine and hope and happiness into that benighted, that desolate, that dreary, that painful home of Loren Burritt. I ask that this bill may receive the sanction of the House.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, before saying anything about the circumstances of this case I wish to remark that the bill is brought before the House this morning by reason of the fact that there had been an adverse report upon it by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the bill was placed on the Calendar because, perhaps, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OSBORNE], or some other member, objected to its being laid on the table. The bill came up last night for action; and by those who were present it was passed through the Committee of the Whole. When it came up in the House the point of no quorum was raised; and thereupon an agreement was made that the previous question should be ordered so that the bill might come up for action in a full House. Either, then, the bill must have been passed last night, or else this was the only course left open for the disposition of the case. This is the excuse we have for bringing the matter before the House this morning.

Mr. Speaker, this case presents a question of more importance than would appear at a glance, and that is another excuse for bringing the bill before a full House. The question is not alone whether this pension should be increased; that is not all there is in the matter; but we have here a question of doing injustice to others when we increase this pension. That is the difficulty.

The present law allows to those who are now placed upon the pension-roll $72 a month only in those cases where the pensioner has lost both eyes, both hands, or both feet. This man, if he had been placed on the roll since June, 1878, would have received only $50 a month, because he has not lost both hands, both eyes, or both feet. There are upon the roll to-day at $50 a month men in just as helpless and suffering a condition as this man who is now drawing $72 a month. There is the difficulty about this matter. If we now should give this man $100 a month it would be unjust to all those who are drawing $72 a month and unjust to many who are drawing only $50 a month, and are in as helpless and suffering a condition as he is.

A MEMBER. How does he get $72 instead of $50?

Mr. MATSON. Because in June, 1878, a law was passed providing that all who were then upon the roll at $50 per month should have their pensions increased to $72 a month; and it was further provided that thereafter those who had lost both hands, both feet, or both eyes should be placed on the pension-roll at $72.

Now, Mr. Speaker, $72 is a tolerably large pension. It is $2.40 a day. It is at least twice as much as the average laborer can make. Taking the wages of laboring men all over this country, I think it will be found that $2.40 is at least twice as much as the average earnings of that class of men.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MATSON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Was not $8 a month the highest total-disability pension before the civil war?

Mr. MATSON. I think it was.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yet here we have a soldier who is drawing nearly nine times as much disability pension as any one formerly got, and still it is proposed by this bill to increase his pay to twelve and a half times as much as any total disability used to secure.

Mr. MATSON. I think $8 a month was the highest rate. Seventy-two dollars a month is the highest rate now. Seventy-two dollars a month this man gets—$2.40 a day.

The difficulty is, Mr. Speaker, if his pension is increased to $100 a month my constituent's pension ought to be increased to $100 a month, and your constituent's pension ought to be increased. All of them ought to be increased.

Can we afford it? There are about nine hundred men on the roll who draw $72 a month. Every one of us represents that sort of a pensioner. Now, can we afford to vote for the constituent of our friend from Pennsylvania to give him $100 a month and allow ours to remain at $72? We can not afford to do that. It would be unjust to our constituents.

So I insist, Mr. Speaker, this bill should not be passed. Whenever it is passed it will be seized on at once as a precedent, and cases of this kind, pitiful as they are, and appealing to our feelings as strongly as they do, will be brought to Congress, and you will be asked in innumerable instances, in all of them, to increase the pension to $100 a month.

If it is right to increase the pension to $100 a month, then that ought to be done by a general law. But it is not right to select out one man's case and say his pension should be put at $100 a month, while the others should remain at $72 a month.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. OSBORNE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

The SPEAKER. All of the time?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. I am inclined to think, sir, I ought to give my support to this bill. While I have been very steadfast in my opposition to the general laws, and to the general disposition to grant pensions to everybody, I have never yet shrunk from daring to take the responsibility to grant a pension to a man when I honestly believed he had earned it and deserved it.

There is but one flaw in this man's record. I do not remember him identically with his personality; I know the command to which he belonged. I have seen it steady in many a fight. But he committed the unpardonable crime of having been selected from the ranks and made a lieutenant-colonel. That is the only flaw I am able to discover in his record which would prejudice him before this Congress.

Wounded twice, a young man of brilliant parts, prepared to follow a professional life, he went out of the service and commenced to enter upon his profession when the effect of his wounds came upon him, and he went down into the position where he now is and has been for ten years past. And I say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] if he has one more case like that, he can always rely upon me to support it; or if he has a hundred, or a thousand, or ten thousand like it, I will follow him steady in line and stay there so long as he has any organization to fight the battle.

What says this adverse report of the condition of this man to-day? Let us see whether you have any other case like it. He is lying on his back substantially helpless with his hands, helpless with his legs, the sight of one eye destroyed by the disease which is eating him up; having lost the control of the functions of his bowels; having lost the control of the functions of his bladder. Will less than $2.40 a day clean him and take care of him? Would the gentleman so suffer for $2.40 a day? That is the case, Mr. Speaker, the adverse report presents to the consideration of this House. It is a case showing the condition of things brought about as the legitimate result of wounds received during the war. There he lies—not a man except in feeling the excruciating pangs arising from his wounds. So intense are his sufferings from those wounds he lies there a mere animal, as it were. Everything he eats passes without his knowledge—not subject to his control; and it is the same thing as to the other organs of his body.

I say that such a man as that is entitled to $100 a month far quicker and much more worthily and deservingly than ninty-nine out of the hundred cases that are sent to this House and have received its approbation for sums ranging from eight to twenty a dollars a month.

I hope the bill will pass. [Applause.]

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were on a division—ayes 75, noes 57.

Mr. KING. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 87, not voting 140; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BRAGG, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. LITTLE, on all questions, on the 7th and 8th of May.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. DORSEY, on all political questions, until Monday next.

The following gentlemen were announced as being paired until further notice:

Mr. CURTIN with Mr. NEGLEY.
Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. PARKER.
Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. GALLINGER.
Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. O'DONNELL.
Mr. CARLETON with Mr. HOLMES.
Mr. FISHER with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.
Mr. BURNES with Mr. BUCHANAN.
Mr. CRAIN with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.
Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. FORNEY with Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. COLE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.
Mr. SEYMOUR with Mr. SCRANTON.
Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. PIRCE.
Mr. HUDD with Mr. FLEEGER.
Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.
Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. CASWELL.
Mr. ELLSBERRY with Mr. HOUK.

For this day:

Mr. SENEY with Mr. DAVENPORT.
Mr. HALSELL with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. BRUMM.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri.
Mr. TAULBEE with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.
Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, with Mr. GROSVENOR.
Mr. HEWITT with Mr. DINGLEY.
Mr. SCOTT with Mr. COOPER.
Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. WHITING.
Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. MCCOMAS.
Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, with Mr. GILFILLAN.
Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska.
Mr. COLLINS with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. LAWLER with Mr. LEHLBACH.
Mr. OWEN with Mr. DIBBLE.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. THOMPSON.

On this vote:

Mr. COWLES with Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED, said he expected to be absent to-day and I promised to secure a pair for him. As I had forgotten it before this vote was taken, I will withdraw my vote for the purpose of making a pair with him. I do not know how he would have voted, but suppose in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour to-day for the call of committees, with a view to asking the House to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. That requires a two-thirds vote.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 102, noes 12.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to inquire, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent, how much time the gentleman contemplates will be consumed with the bill which he proposes to call up. What bill is to be taken up first?

Mr. WHEELER. The first bill is the Military Academy bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. After that the Army appropriation bill is next on the Calendar?

Mr. WHEELER. The diplomatic bill comes next, I believe, on the Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a special order for to-day, being the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the Territories; and I think if any portion of the day is to be taken up in the consideration of other measures, we ought to have the same time allowed us hereafter, and I hope some understanding of that kind may be reached.

The SPEAKER. The special order to which the gentleman refers is subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. HAMMOND. Regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Two full days were to be accorded to the Committee on the Territories before the order is exhausted. Now we might get special consent of the House to devote such portion of the day as remains after the disposition of the bill to which the gentleman from Alabama refers to the consideration of the special order, the rest of the time to be made up some other day.

The SPEAKER. The special order for to-day provides that the matters to be considered shall be a special order until two days are occupied, so that if to-day is lost to the committee it will have the same right on another day.

Mr. SPRINGER. But if a part of the day is taken up now, will we have the privilege of making up the rest of it on another day?

The SPEAKER. If any part of the day is taken up in the consideration of the special order it will count as one day?

Mr. DUNHAM. Does this special order for to-day set aside the morning hour for the consideration of bills?

The SPEAKER. The order provided that after the morning hour this day should be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Territories, not to interfere with general appropriation bills, &c. The morning hour is the hour for the call of Committees. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5886) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, in the performance of my duty as chairman of the committee having charge of the Military Academy bill I do not wish to occupy the time of the House with any extended discussion. The Committee on Military Affairs have considered each item carefully and with a view to economy, and have sought to reduce the appropriation to the lowest limit possible so far as it is consistent with the best interests of the service, but great care has been taken not to reduce any appropriation which could be detrimental to the academy. The appropriation proposed, as it now stands, is about $30,000 less than the average appropriation for several past years.

To the extent of my ability I will gladly answer any question and give such information as I possess regarding any feature of the bill.

The estimates for the year ending June 30, 1887, exclusive of public works, were	$323,497 50
Estimates for public works for Military Academy	394,453 20
Total estimates	717,950 70
Deduct items Secretary of War thinks may be omitted	305,875 00
Leaving regular annual estimates for 1887	412,075 70
Amount of law for 1883	335,557 04
Amount of law for 1884	318,657 50
Amount of law for 1885	314,563 50
Amount of law for 1886	310,021 64
Amount in this bill for year ending June 30, 1887	297,805 00

Three months ago this bill was printed, and at that time I invited criticisms from those best informed, and I requested that they would notify me if any item was inadequate. As I have not received any such suggestion I feel confident our reductions have been proper and judicious.

About $7,000 of the amount in this bill is for new public works at West Point.

I am well aware that some eminent gentlemen contend that this great institution is not a necessity, but upon reflection will they not admit that they are too inclined to judge the future by the recent past?

We have been favored with peace for more than twenty years, and we hope by the blessing of God that this is but the beginning of long, and I would be glad to say an eternal freedom from the strifes and evils of war. But as Providence aids those who aid themselves, should we not, while praying for peace, do all that is in our power to maintain it by making proper as all will admit that peace is most certain to those governments whose preparations to contend with rival powers are the most perfect?

History teaches that after long periods of war the impression prevailed that strife and battle was the normal condition of all people, but after long periods of peace the conclusion seems to have been adopted that war was a thing of the past, and everlasting peace and good-will was henceforth to be the heritage of nations.

Lord Napier, in closing his account of the military operations in Spain, says:

War is the condition of the world. From man to the smallest insect all are at strife, and the glory of arms, which can not be obtained without the exercise of honor, fortitude, courage, obedience, modesty, and temperance, excites the brave man's patriotism and is a chastening corrective for the rich man's pride.

The Academy teaches all these and also the elementary principles of military science. Can any one doubt the absolute necessity for this character of education?

Washington saw the necessity of educated, experienced soldiers, and Franklin was instructed by him to employ European officers to serve in our Army; and certainly it can not be denied that Kosciusko, De Kalb, Steuben, Schuyler, and others were an absolute necessity to the Continental Army.

In his message to Congress in 1796 Washington said:

Whatever arguments may be drawn from particular examples superficially viewed, a thorough examination of the subject will evince that the art of war is both comprehensive and complicated; that it demands much previous study, and that the possession of it, in its most improved and perfect state, is always of great moment to the security of a nation.

Napoleon said:

The knowledge of grand tactics is acquired only by experience and by the study of the history of the campaigns of all the great captains. Gustavus Adolphus, Turenne, Frederick, like Alexander, Hannibal, and Cæsar, have all acted on the same principles of holding their forces united, being nowhere vulnerable, and throwing their masses upon important points: such are the principles which insure victory. Read again and again the campaigns of Alexander, Hannibal, Cæsar, Gustavus, Turenne, Eugene, and of Frederick. Make them your models. This is the only way of becoming a great captain and mastering the secrets of the art of war. Your genius, enlightened by this study, will induce you to reject all maxims in conflict with those of these great commanders.

Nearly all of Napoleon's great generals whom he placed in command of armies were either educated at military schools or had had great experience in military affairs and active campaigns before Napoleon appeared upon the arena of public affairs.

Notwithstanding the large experience of Macdonald and Ney, their was painfully apparent when they attempted independent operations without the aid and direction of their great leader. The result at Quatre Bras, Katsbach, and Dennewitz are proofs that something more is necessary to a general than the bravest and most terrible leadership on the battlefield.

Before taking command of the army of Italy, Napoleon had acquired the best military education of any man of his years; but his campaign of 1796, with all its brilliancy, taught him that he had much to learn; and his devotion to military science after that time showed the advantage of such study in the glory of Austerlitz, Wagram, Jena, Borodino, the great operations of 1814 and the immortal campaign of Waterloo. The great Maurice received a military education, and in turn carefully instructed his nephew, Turenne, in the science of war. From his earliest youth to the day of his death Cæsar was a student and expounder of the principles which secure success in war.

Prince Eugene, with a mind well trained by a thorough education for the church, devoted his mature life to military studies. Frederick the Great was, without doubt, the most thoroughly educated soldier of his period. Wellington received a thorough military training at a military school in France, and Alexander, before being intrusted with any command, was carefully instructed by the most successful generals of his father, Philip of Macedon. The history of these great captains shows that military education and training, supplemented by experience in the camp and in the field, have produced the greatest generals of whom we have any account. Cæsar's greatness was not manifested until his practical experience in Spain and Gaul enabled him to apply the military training and education previously acquired. Wellington would have been overwhelmed at Waterloo had it not been for the severe training he had received in India and the Peninsula. Prince Eugene's triumph at Malplaquet and the military skill displayed by him at Oudenarde and at the siege of Lille were the result in great measure of the training obtained in previous campaigns.

Frederick's greatness, displayed in the seven years' war, was the result of experience and taught by the disasters at Mollwitz and Rossbach. Gustavus Adolphus did not win Leipsic until after years of experience in wars in Poland and Germany. Charles the Twelfth from a child received military instruction, united with practical training in the camp and field.

Marlborough and Cromwell were no exceptions to the principle I contend for. Though neither were students of military science, in their extreme youth, the greatness of their genius enabled them in their maturity to rapidly acquire the knowledge which less gifted men obtained only through years of patient and laborious application.

While, owing to the blessings of peace, the youth of our country can not have any practical experience in armed contests, it is all the more necessary—imperatively demanded alike by the safety and dignity of the country—that they receive an education in the science of war which will go far to atone for this want of experimental knowledge.

If this view be correct, are not those gentlemen right who contend that the course of instruction at the academy should be much enlarged and improved, and that the system of our Army organization should be modified to meet the changed conditions of our country and the changed duties which will devolve upon our military establishment?

When this Republic sprang into existence the immediate necessity of having an armed force to maintain our liberties was obvious, and to meet this necessity we adopted a military system similar to those then in vogue in the monarchical or imperial governments of Europe. It was not acceptable to the people, and upon the close of the Revolutionary war a permanent military establishment was virtually dispensed with, the entire Army at one time being a small corps of artillery commanded by a captain.

In their colonial state the experience of our forefathers with regular troops had been singularly unfortunate. The English forces in the Colonies regarded the inhabitants as immeasurably inferior to themselves in every respect, mentally, morally, and socially, and the natural result was that the colonists were continuously and habitually subjected to insults and acts of petty oppression. The consequence was that there was engendered a distrust of and dislike to anything like a permanent army. And it is curious to notice how slowly and reluctantly the early Congresses brought themselves to the recognition of the young Republic with some feeble apology for a regular military establishment.

By resolution of the 7th of April, 1785, the enlistment of 700 men was authorized. On the 3d of October, 1787, the Congress—

Resolved, That the interests of the United States require that a corps of seven hundred troops should be stationed on the frontiers to protect the settlers on the public lands from the depredations of the Indians. * * *

Resolved, That seven hundred non-commissioned officers and privates be raised for the term of three years, unless sooner discharged.

This feeling of distrust was so prevalent and so deeply rooted that the framers of the Constitution gave unmistakable expression to it in that instrument.

Section 8 of Article I enumerates the powers delegated to Congress. It says:

The Congress shall have power * * *
10. To declare war. * * *
11. To raise and support armies; but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.
12. To provide and maintain a navy. * * *
15. To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia. * * *

It will be observed that the grant of authority to raise and support armies immediately follows the authority to declare war, and seems to be incident to it, but even then, though apparently contemplating a state of active hostilities, the power to appropriate money for the purpose of maintaining an armed force is strictly and expressly limited to a period of only two years, and this is the only instance to be found in the whole Constitution where there is any limitation as to the time for which Congress can appropriate money. There is no limit fixed to the period for which it can appropriate money to maintain a navy; there is no limit to the period for which money may be appropriated to organize and arm the militia. For all that the Constitution contains to the contrary an appropriation for either of these purposes may extend over a period of ten, fifteen, or twenty years. And the same is true regarding every other branch of the public service. It is only in relation to the expenditures for the regular Army that appropriations are expressly limited as to time, and that time, as we have seen, is fixed at two years.

If this fact stood alone, unsupported by any other evidence, historical or legendary, it would suffice of itself to prove how distrustful, if not apprehensive, the framers of the Constitution were of anything like a regular military establishment.

The hostilities of the Indians and their attacks upon the settlers on our frontier with their attendant depredations speedily for regular troops and professional soldiers. We find that in nearly all the laws authorizing the organization or the use of troops, which were enacted in the early days of our history, it is definitely set forth that the purpose is "protecting the inhabitants of the frontiers of the United States." This purpose is distinctly specified in the act of September 29, 1789, and April 30, 1790. The caption of the act of March 3, 1791, is:

An act for raising and adding another regiment to the military establishment of the United States, and for making further provision for the protection of the frontiers.

The caption of the act of March 5, 1792, is:

An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the protection of the frontiers of the United States.

The caption of the act of March 28, 1792, is:

An act supplemental to the act for making further and more effectual provisions for the protection of the frontiers of the United States.

And the act of June 7, 1794, is entitled:

An act in addition to the act for making further and more effectual provisions for the protection of the frontiers of the United States.

It may be remarked in passing that it was about this time, in 1793, that President Washington, in his message, earnestly pressed the recommendation for the establishment of the Military Academy—a recommendation which was approved by Randolph, Hamilton, and Knox, of his Cabinet.

It will be seen that the germ from which our present regular Army sprang originated in the necessity for a force to engage the hostile Indians, and as this is a matter which will soon be eliminated from the military problem, it behooves us to consider what changes and improvements should be made to adapt the Army to our changed conditions.

We are now the richest, most powerful, and most enlightened people on earth, and in point of numbers we exceed any other civilized country. We have a seacoast more than 3,000 miles in extent, and I do not think I am in error when I say that no point on that coast is adequately defended.

Gentlemen who imagine that peace must continue indefinitely because peace has prevailed for twenty years will find that their conclusions are not warranted by the teachings of history.

In Europe from 1815 to 1854 the struggles of the ardent champions of liberty from 1847 to 1850, which left their impress upon nearly every continental nationality, left England wholly unaffected, and it was no unusual thing to read or to hear the declaration that England was no longer involved in continental affairs, and that her great influence over European policy was a thing of the past. And yet every one is familiar with the bitter humiliation of England in the Crimea.

Hardly had the victor of Ciudad Rodrigo, Torres Vedras, and Waterloo submitted to "the stern arrest of that fell sergeant Death," when his country was aroused from a fond by different constructions of a clause in the treaty of Kainardji, of July 10, 1774, between Russia and Turkey.

In all the long forty years which followed the triumph at Waterloo, England had paid but little attention to her military establishment. Whenever the occasion demanded a show of force on her part, it was supplied by her matchless navy. Greece—inoffensive, feeble, helpless Greece—hesitated about paying Don Pacifico exorbitant prices for his bedding and family wearing apparel, and English vessels seized upon the Grecian navy, and Lord Palmerston leaped into fame as a great parliamentary leader by boldly announcing and defending the principle that no English citizen could be so insignificant as to be unworthy of protection by the full power and strength of his government. China disregarded a treaty stipulation as to the rights conferred by a British consular registry, and an English man-of-war promptly exacted and obtained a humble apology and ample reparation.

But while her navy was thus efficiently omnipresent, England's military establishment had been almost wholly neglected. Her leaders of public opinion—not only politicians, but statesmen as well—had acted upon the theory that England was destined to enjoy perpetual peace because an English army had not been wanted for forty years. Suddenly this illusion was dispelled.

AN ENGLISH ARMY WAS NEEDED, was hurried against a foe disdainfully spoken of as barbarous, or as but half-civilized at best—and the vaunted British army was found to be sadly deficient in every essential quality of an army excepting the physical courage of the men and officers. France, Turkey, and even Sardinia, were bewildered by the exhibition of pitiful inefficiency, and began to wonder if the traditional accounts of British military superiority were merely impudent fables, while English newspaper correspondents found opportunities to convert the national disgrace to their individual advantage.

A few years later and Magenta and Solferino laid the boasted military power of Austria in the dust. A decade rolled by, and the mighty military machine which Prussia had been patiently perfecting for years gave the first startling proof of its resistless power on Sadowa's fatal field; and within five years the pitiable weakness of the military system and organization of the most martial people on the globe was exposed to the scorn and derision of the world in the unbroken series of shameful defeats and disasters which culminated at Sedan.

From the treaty of Paris to 1848 Austria had enjoyed peace without preparing for war, and when Kossuth and his coadjutors raised the standard of rebellion she escaped dismemberment only by Russian intervention. Though an armed neutral all through the Crimean war, she in her system of military organization or administration, and thirty months later the execution of Cavour's agreement with Louis Napoleon was rendered possible. Still disregarding the lessons of a painful and humilating experience, she neglected the art of war, and Sadowa stripped her of international importance and practically reduced her to a political cipher.

France, showy, frivolous, hollow, corrupt, exposed her weakness when she abandoned Maximilian to an ignominious death, and four years later demonstrated anew the measureless inferiority of audacious and confident pretension when opposed to thoroughly efficient organization. The swift and overwhelming defeat of France in 1870 can be explained and understood only by realizing the inefficiency and corruption of her military system.

Nor will it do to say that the experience of England in 1854, of Austria in 1859 and 1866, and of France in 1870 can not possibly be ours at any future time. We are far more powerful than any state contiguous to us, it is true, but the activity and are becoming keener and more vigilant every day. Should the period, happily, be near at hand when we shall destroy or modify that baneful system which limits the market for our surplus products to our own community, when our unfettered commerce shall be permitted to compete in the markets of the world for that recognition and reward to which we are entitled by the extent and variety of our resources and the superior skill of our artisans and mechanics—when that period shall have arrived, it is not at all impossible, Mr. Chairman, that we shall be called on to protect, with a show of force, those commercial and industrial advantages which we have gained by the triumph of sound economic principles over specious and delusive theories.

Spain, almost in the extremity of a hopeless bankruptcy, is seeking advantages by reciprocity treaties, and diplomacy may yet place her in the attitude of an ally of the most powerful nation in Europe. Germany is developing a colonial policy that may make her a formidable competitor in many ports where hitherto her name was but the synonym of her "blood and iron" policy. France, unhappily, is torn and distracted by intestine factional feuds, and therefore it may be safe just now to regard her commercial rivalry as inconsiderable and inconsequential; but Italy is silently, unostentatiously, but sedulously spreading her trade in every direction; the great Australasian colonies of England are rapidly taking their places as recognized and reliable sources of supply for many articles which thickly-populated Europe must have at a low price; the immense wheat crops of British India threaten to reduce the price of that great staple to a point below remuneration to the farmers of the United States, and to still further reduce our exports great European nations have already levied a discriminating tax against American wheat; British Canada and the British West Indies are zealously striving to absorb their share of the commerce of the world, and England still manages to maintain her preeminence as the workshop for all mankind. Mexico, Brazil, the South American republics—in short, all peoples but ourselves are diligently seeking to add something to their commercial and industrial prosperity.

And we must participate in this universal struggle if we would see our people once more happy and contented.

THE GREAT QUESTION

which now demands solution at the hands of American statesmen is not the tariff, unequal, unjust, and iniquitous though the law as it now stands may be; it is not the currency, though the effort to strike down one-half of our coinage, and give to every bondholder, Federal, State, municipal, and corporate, practically double the sum lawfully his due, is one of the gravest importance.

No, Mr. Chairman, it is neither of these. The paramount and ominous question which now confronts American statesmanship is the combination of the employed against the employer. It threatens soon to pass—if indeed it have not already passed—the point where the employé is called on to discuss how much per cent. protection he will pay the manufacturers of his blanket, his undershirt, or his hat, and he is being brought face to face with the question whether he is to have any blanket, undershirt, or hat; and worse than that, whether he will have even bread for himself and little ones.

It is not so much a question of whether the toiler shall receive a paper dollar, a gold dollar, or a silver dollar, as whether he will be allowed to receive any dollar whatever.

While millionaires, banks, and corporations are interesting themselves about the kind of dollar they would like to collect, the workingman, the creator of all wealth, is asking himself, "How much can I get for my very last dollar?" and "Will I be allowed to earn another?"

It may be asked what possible connection can there be between the very last dollar of the unhappy workingman and the Military Academy bill? Apparently there is very little connection, but really there is a great deal.

Either we must speedily find new outlets for the surplus products of the workingman's labor, or there will be a demand that we find employment for a portion of the idle labor at the public expense in building fortifications, erecting public buildings, and improving our rivers and harbors. This is work which may be neccessary, but adds nothing to the actual wealth of the country.

If the new markets can be found for the surplus products of the workingman's labor, it may become necessary, as I have already shown, to that commercial advantage by military force, and I presume no one will dispute the universally admitted proposition, that in this event those graduated at the Military Academy will be needed to assist in rendering the vast volunteer force of the different States available to meet any emergency.

If the second alternative shall become necessary, that of giving Government work to the unemployed (but I feel confident that by proper legislation such a necessity may be avoided), how can he be so advantageously employed as in constructing the works required to remedy our present defenseless condition and in the much-needed improvement of our inland navigation?—and here again the skill and efficiency of the Military Academy graduates will be indispensable.

If the improvement in our commercial and industrial condition be impossible, and there can be no use for military force in defense of that improvement, and if as a people we do not feel disposed to construct works to defend our coasts and harbors and improve our rivers and thus give employment to an insignificant fraction of the vast army of suffering workingmen who are now banded together against the exactions of corporate greed, still, Mr. Chairman, even in this deplorable state of affairs this would continue to be a great republic; great in its numbers, great in its wealth, great in its resources, great in its opportunities and possibilities, and great in its obligations, and to every great people an army is a necessity.

Thank Heaven, in this favored land the necessity for an army is not found in the desire of one class to hold another in subjection; in the obligation of the Government to defend and uphold special privileges, to enforce obedience to oppressive and unequal laws. It is one of the blessings of our institutions, a direct and immediate consequence of our system of government, that an army is not needed in the United States for these purposes—that it can not, should not, must not, shall not be used for these purposes.

But an army is, and always must be, a necessity in every community elevated above barbarism, as the visible symbol, the outward manifestation of the which called it into existence, and as an army is a necessity to every government, and as there could not be an army without trained and educated officers, we must have an academy where such training and education may be obtained.

The average strength of the Army during the past twenty years of peace has been 33,330, and the average number reported for duty has not exceeded 20,000.

I will read a statement showing the actual expenses of the War Department for twenty years, commencing with the year ending June 30, 1866, and ending with the year ending June 30, 1885.

1866	$283,154,676 06	1877	37,082,735 90
1867	95,224,415 63	1878	32,154,147 85
1868	123,246,648 62	1879	40,425,660 73
1869	78,501,990 61	1880	38,116,916 22
1870	57,655,675 40	1881	40,466,460 55
1871	35,779,991 82	1882	43,570,494 19
1872	35,372,157 20	1883	48,911,382 93
1873	46,823,138 31	1884	39,429,603 36
1874	42,313,927 22	1885	42,670,578 00
1875	41,120,645 98
1876	38,070,888 64		1,239,592,135 22

As this includes the expenditures for rivers and harbors, fortifications, the Signal Service, and Military Academy I deduct these, viz:

Appropriations for rivers and harbors, 1866 to 1886, twenty years	$118,271,214 00
Appropriations for fortifications, 1866 to 1886, twenty years	19,762,000 00
Appropriations for Military Academy, 1866 to 1886, twenty years	6,301,472 00
Appropriations for Signal Corps	5,623,351 00
Deduct probable expenditures during last twenty years which should be charged to the war	89,634,098 22
	239,592,135 22

Leaving exactly $1,000,000,000 as the actual cost since the war, and we therefore find that the average net annual expenditure for the Army during that period of twenty years of peace has been over $50,000,000.

This shows that the annual outlay for every officer and soldier on duty has averaged over $1,500, taking the average strength of the Army as the basis, but if we take the average present for duty the outlay has been $2,500.

But gentlemen say this is not a fair estimate, because it includes the pay of the officers, which is very much greater than that of the privates. It is true this does include the pay of officers as well as privates. The Paymaster-General reports the total amount paid to officers during the twenty years ending June 30, 1885, as $115,873,587.55; deducting this from the $1,000,000,000 expended during twenty years, we would have in round numbers $884,000,000; and, therefore, even if the officers got no pay whatever, we see the annual average expense of every officer and soldier on the rolls has been $1,326; and, making the estimate upon the basis of the average number of soldiers reported for duty, we will find the average annual expense of each for the last twenty years has been $2,210.

I do not mean to say that my figures are absolutely correct, but they certainly approximate the truth.

The question to be considered is whether the laws regarding the Army are so framed as to obtain the best results for this expenditure. I think all will admit that they are not; and the important consideration in this connection is, what changes are necessary in the organization and administration of the Army to secure such improvement as will place our military establishment on such a basis as will not only but will convince the world that we are able to cope with any adversary or any coalition of our enemies that might be formed.

SECURE THE GREATEST EFFICIENCY,

Before entering upon any discussion of the means by which this improvement of our Army may be secured, I wish it to be distinctly understood that I do not regard the suggestions I shall make on the subject as likely to produce results at all approximating the high plane of perfection upon which I would like to place the military establishment of our country. I offer them simply as suggestions, in the hope they will lead the best minds of our country to consider this important question, and induce an interchange of ideas and opinions which shall result in the adoption of the wisest measures and the attainment of the greatest benefits, not only to the Army but to the country.

It is evident from the records that in the Continental Congress, as well as in the early Congresses under the Constitution, the dominant idea with regard to a military establishment was that of vigilant and unqualified opposition to its organization in any form, rather than to the creation of a system which should be in harmony with the new theories of government which formed the basis of our institutions.

Before any proposed change can be carried into effect we may assume that the Indian question will have been permanently settled, and it may therefore be discarded as without practical bearing or influence upon the future of our Army.

The first question to be considered, then, is as to the most effective method of teaching the details of military administration, and bringing our Army up—both officers and men—to that standard of efficiency and scientific which shall at least place it upon terms of equality with the best organized force of which we have any knowledge.

This, I submit, can best be done by increasing the facilities enjoyed by our officers for the acquisition of military science and by instructing and elevating the rank and file. It would entail no additional expense to very much enlarge the course of study at the Military Academy and to extend the period to five years. This would enable the cadet to be more thoroughly instructed in the higher military studies, and, when we consider our vast German immigration, the language of that people should be thoroughly taught.

It is a well-known fact that our officers do not have opportunities of acquiring that wide range of knowledge which is necessary in order that they may be able to cope with those of foreign nations.

Opportunities and incentives should be given all officers to diligently prosecute the studies of their profession, and liberal details should be made from the most meritorious to visit, study, investigate, and report upon the organization, discipline, drill, and administration, and all other characteristics, peculiarities, and features of foreign armies.

If the law provided that from three to five of the most meritorious and valuable of these reports should be published each year, it is quite evident that it would excite emulation among officers to excel in this important duty, and thereby secure this honorable distinction. We ought to be enabled by this means to incorporate in our own system every good feature which the experience of other nations has shown to be valuable. And these officers would possess a familiar knowledge of the practical working and advantages of the innovations and improvements suggested in their reports. We should thus secure not only a wider theoretical knowledge, but practical acquirements which would be of immense advantage to the service in case of war. A great country like ours, the greatest on earth, should have the greatest army—not the greatest in numbers, but the greatest in efficiency and in knowledge of war.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that in the past our skeleton Army has proved to be the most effective basis in the world for a large and efficient army?

Mr. WHEELER. We have done a great deal, I admit.

I am proud to say that we have done much, but what I insist upon is that in a country like ours, where the precious blood of American soldiers is carried into battle, those soldiers ought to be led by the highest talent, the highest education, the greatest attainable military ability; and much as we have done, there is much that we may still do to improve our system and to eradicate the evils that have developed themselves in the past.

A thorough and radical change should be made in the instruction, discipline, and character of the rank and file of the Army. No officer should permit any soldier to perform any menial or servile duty, and any soldier who is willing to do it should be dishonorably discharged. If this rule was strictly and imperatively adhered to, a superior class of men—I might say the best class of the young workingmen of the country—would enlist in the Army.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman please state what he means by menial duties?

Mr. WHEELER. Well, sir, our soldiers sometimes do servants' duty; it is true that when they do this sort of work it is voluntary, but still they do duty which debases them, and this fact prevents a high class of honorable and high-toned men from enlisting as privates in the Army. That evil ought to be stopped. A great deal has been done to stop it heretofore, but it ought to be brought to an end by an imperative order, by an imperative law.

The time of the enlisted man should be incessantly occupied in a systematic and carefully digested course of discipline and instruction designed to make him not only efficient as a soldier but valuable as a citizen.

Every company in the regular Army should equal, if not excel, any of the most famous volunteer organizations of the country in drill and discipline, and the esprit de corps which stimulates the desire to attain the very highest excellence should be sedulously cultivated.

Every company should be drilled until it reaches the high standard of perfection which distinguishes the corps of cadets at West Point.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Would not that make your army very expensive?

Mr. WHEELER. On the contrary, it would make it less expensive than it is now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has not the tendency been rather to encourage our soldiers to engage in other labors not inconsistent with their military duty as a means of increasing their compensation, and has it not been the uniform custom of our Government, since we first established a standing army, to encourage the soldiers to do something to add to their pay by such other labors as would be consistent with their military employment?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; it has been the custom to allow them to do extra work or duty for which they receive 25 or 40 cents a day besides regular compensation, and their time and attention have been occupied in that way when they ought to have been receiving instruction in soldierly duty.

Mr. HOLMAN. We pay them now, I believe, 40 cents a day.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir, 40 cents a day; and, as I have said, they are engaged in that kind of extra work when they ought to be engaged in learning to be thoroughly educated soldiers, so that they would be efficient for the purpose for which the Army is enlisted and maintained.

The thousands of desertions from the Army tend very much to show that recruits find the position of a private in the Army very different from what they expected, and the fact that so many do desert goes far to prove that many of the rank and file are lacking in character and principle.

The enlistment of men whose habits or course of life have closed for them other avocations, and who seek the Army as an asylum of last resort, should not be permitted. But the privilege of wearing the uniform of a soldier of the United States should be converted into and the Army should be sought by young men of spirit and ambition who are anxious to elevate themselves while serving their country. They should be enabled to realize and appreciate the fact that the discipline and instruction acquired during their term of service tends to fit them for the duties of positions of trust and responsibility in civil life when honorably discharged, and the general public would soon learn to recognize an honorable discharge as a certificate of courage, intelligent subordination, steadfastness of character, and reliability in any pursuit. That this has not been so in the past is no proof that it is not feasible in the future. We have adopted and undeviatingly adhered to a military system which the governments of Europe have deemed best suited to their subjects and serfs, and the result has been that too often the American soldier has felt himself to be a servant instead of a sovereign. I would have that system abandoned, and in its place would inaugurate one which would elevate the privates in our Army in their own esteem, and thereby enable them to command the respect, admiration, and confidence of their fellow-citizens. I would have the American soldier feel that by becoming such he does not cease to be a citizen—retaining all the rights and privileges of his citizenship, and bound to perform all its duties and to meet all its obligations.

Gentlemen may say that this is the dream of a visionary; that there never was such a soldiery. But, I reply, it is not a dream.

THERE NEVER WAS SUCH A PEOPLE from which to create a soldiery; and as the Roman soldier, in the best days of the republic, commanded the admiration of the world for his civic pride and virtues no less than for his martial prowess, so may the military servants of this Republic be relieved of the stigma which a mistaken policy has affixed to their occupation, and win universal recognition as a sure defense in war, a source of civil strength in peace.

It must be obvious that such men would be eagerly sought for as chiefs and officers of police and fire departments in our large cities and for other avocations which demand the exercise of qualities developed by this character of training. And in case of war there would be no difficulty in finding men fully qualified to organize, drill, and prepare vast bodies of troops for immediate service.

If it be said that I contend for what is not practicable, that is no reason why we should not endeavor to at least approximate the degree of excellence and efficiency which we desire to reach, and it seems to me that it is not asking too much to strive for this degree of superiority in soldiers who are maintained at an annual cost of $2,500 for each man reported for duty. The present condition of the Signal Corps, which is composed of enlisted men, affords gratifying evidence that it is not impossible to raise the rank and file to a position of dignity and respectability, and to secure thereby an exceptional degree of efficiency. I would also cite the enlisted men of the Corps of Engineers as confirmatory evidence on this point.

An essential to efficiency is that the soldier should be well fed, well clothed, and that his surroundings should be such as are demanded by sanitary requirements. If the regulations required that one commissioned officer of each company should eat at the same mess as the soldiers of that company, we all know that this officer would see to it that the food was wholesome and well cooked. If one officer was required to sleep in the same barracks with the soldiers of his company, we could depend upon it that the quarters would be kept clean, well aired, and healthy.

This need not in any way lessen the dignity or impair the authority of the officer, while it certainly would tend to elevate and dignify the soldier. In campaigns officers bivouac beside their soldiers and stand shoulder to shoulder with them in battle, and the officer who shares most readily in their privations and dangers is the one who has most authority and influence.

The sections of the Revised Statutes ought to be repealed. They have become obsolete and impracticable. It is impracticable to enroll, muster, and drill every able-bodied man between the ages of eighteen and forty-five. It is absurd, in the present improved condition of fire-arms, to require every citizen of the United States to keep himself provided with a "musket or firelock and two spare flints and a shot-pouch and powder-horn." It is no longer necessary that the dragoon shall be required by law to provide himself with the numerous articles mentioned, including "mail-pillion and breast-plate." To enforce the militia laws as originally intended would cost as much as is now expended in all other branches of the Government; and as we depend upon volunteer soldiers for war, so also we ought to place our reliance upon volunteer soldiers in time of peace; and therefore we should enact laws to encourage and assist volunteer organizations. Upon application from volunteer companies regular officers and drill-masters should be sent to inspect and temporarily instruct them, and at convenient periods volunteer companies should be permitted to garrison our forts for periods of two or three weeks in each year, during which time they should be thoroughly instructed in everything pertaining to the duty of a soldier.

REGARDING THE MILITIA

This may, at the first glance, appear to be impracticable, but the difficulties would not be so great as one would suppose.

A VOLUNTEER COMPANY

ordinarily consists of about one hundred men. They could be notified months in advance that the company, with forty rank and file, would be required to report for three weeks' duty at a designated rendezvous. This would give them ample time for preparation, and the forty men who would go would be those who desired this opportunity for instruction. These and various other methods which could be adopted to give volunteer soldiers instruction by regular officers would be highly advantageous in many respects. Besides imparting a vast amount of military instruction to the people generally, it would enable the regular Army and the citizen soldiery to become familiar with each other, which would be very beneficial in case of war, and would make the military establishment nearer what ought to be "an army for a Republic."

It is worth considering if it would not be desirable to have all the officers of the line of the Army organized into corps, one of cavalry, one of artillery, and one of infantry. The enlisted men could then be organized into companies of one hundred men each, and one captain and two or possibly three lieutenants detailed to officer each company. This would make good company organizations, and from one-third to one-half of the officers of the Army would be available for duties with the volunteer companies and in the study of foreign armies and various other duties which they could be called upon to perform.

A full complement of officers would thus be kept with each regiment, the details being for periods of from four to six years, and the changes being so gradual as to take but few officers from any regiment at the same time. The excellence to which any captain brought a company while in command would be recorded, and would be one test of his efficiency. So with regard to a colonel. The improvement of a regiment while under his command would to a great degree measure his military status. There would no longer be regiments commanded by captains and companies commanded by second lieutenants.

To those who contend that it is important not to give up the old company and regimental organizations, I would suggest that, while these might be kept up to some extent in a time of peace, they would cease to have any existence or organization during actual war, as the great majority of the officers would be necessarily separated from their former companies and regiments, doing duty with the volunteers and in the details which would become necessary.

It seems to me that if

WE ELEVATED AND INSTRUCTED THE PRIVATE

as we should very few of them would continue to serve with their regular organizations in case of war. If they all were taught as they could be and should be they would be competent to instruct companies and even regiments, and at the first alarm of war the greater part of the regular Army would be scattered throughout the United States, drilling and organizing volunteer troops, so that in a very few weeks raw organizations could acquire the requisite elementary instruction to render them effective; and there are many gentlemen on this floor who know from experience that any drill officer, by diligence, effort, and industry, could take a raw regiment and in three or four weeks so teach it as to enable it to make a very respectable appearance, and by that time its own officers would be sufficiently instructed to go on and give a thorough drill to the regiment.

Suppose that in 1861 there had been fifteen thousand superior drill-masters available to scatter all over the United States. Can any one imagine the rapidity with which efficient and well-drilled troops could have been furnished the Government?

If thought best, the law could provide that when private soldiers are sent out to drill regiments they could have a distinctive rank as drill-masters, with appropriate pay and emoluments. Of course many of these drill-masters would so impress themselves upon the troops as to secure positions as field officers or adjutants of the various regiments, and the possibility or probability that such would be the case would inevitably tend to elevate the position of the private soldier by showing him that there were avenues for his advancement. Such a system would enable us to put a most in the field soon after we were threatened with war, and by the time a hostile army could be landed on our shores. I do not mean to say that this alone would give our country the protection which we need, but it would give us one of the essential elements of such protection, and, in conjunction with an efficient navy and proper fortifications, it would effectually maintain the honor and defend the property of our country. It is painful to reflect upon what might be the result should we suddenly become engaged in war with any of the great powers of Europe. That they could destroy some of our largest cities seems to me a question regarding which there can be but one answer, and it is certainly to be hoped that our country will be spared the humiliation of making its choice between the evils of having some of our largest cities destroyed or agreeing to terms of peace by which we bound ourselves, as France did in 1871, to pay all the expenses of the war incurred by the nation with which we were engaged.

I think it will be admitted that the great improvements in offensive and defensive weapons which have taken place in the last few years, and which improvements have been adopted by foreign powers, are such that it would not be impossible for hostile guns to be successfully brought to bear on many of the largest seaports of this country.

There is another question which I fear has not been sufficiently considered. I hear it asserted as coming from high authority that there are not enough merchant and naval ships in the world to transport from Europe an army sufficiently large to cause us any alarm. I think those who make these statements have not given the subject sufficient examination. While it might not be feasible to effect the simultaneous landing of a vast force in our immediate vicinity at once, yet it would be entirely possible by successive trips to to some point near the United States, and then, by the aid of a powerful navy and a large fleet of transports, flying back and forth, they could promptly and readily place any desired force at a selected point upon the coast of the United States. We might capture some of their transports and might cause them serious inconvenience and great annoyance, but a determined nation would overcome these difficulties, and the possibilities of what might be accomplished are well worth thought and investigation. I was so impressed with the importance of a thorough knowledge of the military organizations and systems of Europe and their administration, means of transportation, methods of supply, &c., that early in the session I introduced a bill to establish a bureau of statistics and information, which would enable us to acquire a thorough familiarity with these important questions. The method by which this object is sought to be attained is explained by the bill, which I will read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be created a bureau of military statistics and information, said bureau to be under the direction and supervision of the Inspector-General of the Army.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the President to designate an officer of the Inspector-General's Department to take charge of said bureau.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the officer in charge of the bureau of military statistics and information to keep in his office full information regarding the strength, organization, armament, and equipment of the armies of all civilized nations. He shall also keep in his office full information regarding the location or stations of troops belonging to the armies of said nations, and the approximate number of troops at each station, and the character of the fortifications of said nations. He shall also keep in his office full information regarding the ships belonging to the navies of said nations, and also full information regarding the merchant ships which sail under the flags of said nations, together with all necessary details showing the capacity of said ships for transporting troops and for transporting the armaments of said troops.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War and the Lieutenant-General commanding the Army are authorized to make all necessary regulations for the guidance of the officer in charge of the bureau which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

The advantages to be derived from such a measure are fully recognized by the military authorities, and work of this character is already in progress under the direction of the Adjutant-General.

To emphasize what I have said, let me call the attention of the House to the official reports which give the actual number of officers and men which compose the armies of the principal nations of the world on a peace footing.

The insignificance of the Army of the United States, in point of numbers, as compared with the armies of other nations, must attract attention, and goes far to sustain the position I have taken, that this small army should be brought to the highest degree of perfection:

The war footing of every nation may be said to be at least one-tenth of its population. I have therefore stated the population of each of these countries, and we may assume that their armies, upon a war footing, could be easily increased in the proportion I have indicated.

The spirit of our institutions and the spirit of our people is such that the maintenance of a large regular army will not be tolerated. If further proof upon this point were needed, it has been conclusively demonstrated by the recent action of the Senate upon the proposal to add five thousand men to our present force.

Confident in their virtue, confident in their courage, confident in their strength, and rejoicing in the assured conviction that their institutions must secure the honor of the Republic and the prosperity and happiness of all, the American people feel that they can safely dispense with a large military establishment. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if no gentleman desires to continue the debate, I ask that the bill be now read by paragraphs.

Mr. WILSON. Before that request is put to the committee I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. I may have to preface it with a few sentences. I fully believe that the value of the Military Academy at West Point justifies the support given to it by Congress; that it has justified this support in all its history, and never more so than in recent times. I believe that institution furnishes us with a corps of well-educated, capable officers, of high character, to command whatever army we may have, and it furnishes also a corps of capable engineer officers, through whom the improvements of the water ways of the country are now conducted, and upon whose capacity and upon whose integrity the success of these improvements must always depend.

But the question I would like to ask the gentleman is this: Whether the standard of admission at the Military Academy at West Point, and I might also include the Naval Academy at Annapolis, has not in recent years been raised so high as practically to exclude from the enjoyment of the benefits of those institutions the great mass of the young men of the country—perhaps I may be within bounds in saying 99 per cent. of the youth of the country?

I fully agree that the standard of graduation in these institutions should be maintained at its present high point, that the scholarship exacted from the young men who attend those institutions in order to prepare them for the positions they are to occupy in the military and naval service of the country should be of the highest and the course of study should be complete and exact; but I believe the standard of admission, the preliminary examination in scholarship required of the young men appointed to cadetships, both at West Point and Annapolis, is so high as to exclude from the privileges of education at either of those schools more than 99 per cent. of the youth of this country. In fact it is impossible, except for young men who live in the cities and larger towns of the country where good schools are accessible, or that more limited class of young men who are able to go from home to attend such schools, to pass this preliminary examination and avail themselves of the military education offered at these schools.

Mr. BEACH. Will the gentleman from West Virginia permit me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. I will yield with pleasure to the gentleman from New York to ask his question of the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BEACH. The question I desire to ask the gentleman from West Virginia is this: Has he had any difficulty in securing a young man in his district sufficiently qualified to come up to the standard of examination fixed at West Point for admission into that institution? I presume he has appointed a cadet to the Military Academy during his membership in the House.

Mr. WILSON. In answer to the gentleman's question in regard to my own experience I will say it so happens the district I represent is a very large one geographically. In that district is the State university of my State, and also in it are two of the State normal schools, but there are also large counties on either side of the Alleghany Mountains, one county of 1,000 miles of territory in extent, where there are nothing but the common schools. And it is the fact about 99 per cent. of the young men of that country can not get any other education except that obtainable in these common schools.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, as soon as I answer the question of the gentleman from New York. In looking for young men to appoint to either the Military Academy at West Point or the Naval Academy at Annapolis I am almost excluded from those counties where perhaps I should find the best material to send to these schools, because those counties have not in their borders schools where young men can acquire the necessary preliminary education.

The standard at Annapolis is particularly rigid, and I believe it is entirely too rigid, because it works this very exclusion. The standard now exacted either at West Point or Annapolis would have excluded from the benefits of either of these institutions a very large number of the most illustrious names in our civil war.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me interrupt the gentleman for one moment.

Mr. WILSON. I am occupying the floor by courtesy of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WHEELER. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas to ask his question.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say that the superintendent of the Naval Academy at Annapolis a few days ago appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House and stated the young men whose whole experience was passed in the common schools, and all of whose knowledge was gained at those institutions, entered that Naval Academy more often than those who had the benefit of a superior education.

Mr. BEACH. And the superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point gives precisely the same testimony.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say I have examined with care the catalogues of these institutions, and particularly of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and I have examined with care the standard of examinations of candidates for admission, and I will say that examination is much above the range of studies in the common schools of this country.

Mr. SAYERS. The superintendent of the Naval Academy stated, as a reason why these young men who had had only the benefit of a common-school education succeeded, as a rule, better than those who had been attending colleges, was that the rudiments of education which they received at the common schools seemed to give them superior advantages as a basis for an education than those received by other young men who had been attending universities or colleges.

Mr. KING. I think that is not the experience generally.

Mr. WILSON. It is certainly not my experience, and is contrary to my judgment.

Mr. SAYERS. It is my experience as far as I have had an opportunity of judging of this matter.

Mr. WILSON. Nor is it my judgment based on the standard required at this academy, as indicated by the catalogue furnished by the academy itself.

Now, the common-school system affords, in different sections of the country, different facilities for obtaining an education; for instance, where the population is very sparse the common-school system does not afford such good facilities as in those localities where the population is dense; and I say to gentlemen now that neither Ulysses Grant, nor Stonewall Jackson who went from my State, having had no opportunity for an education except that afforded by the common-school system in a sparsely settled county and a few months' experience as a constable—that neither of them could enter West Point to-day under the standard of scholarship required for admission.

Mr. SOWDEN. Nor could they enter the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Mr. WILSON. Nor the Naval Academy. And what I desire my friend from Alabama to answer now is whether, without increasing the expenses of these institutions, it is not possible to make that standard less rigid or exacting—or what I may term of a flexible character—so that a young man who goes there for admission can take his place in the classes just as a young man can take his place who goes to Yale or Harvard, according to the proficiency he has attained in the various studies required at those institutions.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from West Virginia, I will state that there is no error so great as the prevailing impression that a very high standard of educational proficiency is required of those who enter West Point. In mathematics, they simply require the simplest rudiments—fractions and a knowledge of the rule of three; in fact, in reference to mathematics, nothing more is demanded than a mere general knowledge of the first principles which are taught in arithmetic.

But another great error prevails in supposing that mathematics is the great stumbling-block upon which so many fail. I took pains recently to learn accurately the number of those who had failed to pass the entering examination at West Point and had therefore been rejected.

The official reports show that the number of cadets examined at the Military Academy from 1838 to 1885 was 5,630. If the number examined from the establishment of the institution to 1838 was in the same proportion the total number examined would be 9,942, but as the number examined in the earlier years was probably not so great, these figures no doubt slightly exceed the actual examinations for admission.

Of the whole number examined for admission only 3,094 were graduated. Of these there were appointed to the corps of engineers, 262; ordnance, 72; line (cavalry, infantry, artillery), 2,747; marines, 5; not commissioned, 8.

It is an error to suppose that those who fail in the entrance examination are rejected for deficiency in mathematics. Of the 5,630 who were examined from 1838 to 1885, 1,378 were rejected by the academic and medical boards. Of these there were deficient in arithmetic, 638; writing, 549; orthography, 544; grammar, 542; geography, 380; history, 352; physically, 179; reading, 170.

Of course some of the applicants for admission were deficient in several of these studies and some in only one.

There were forty-one alternates admitted during this period.

This shows that almost as many failed on account of deficiency in writing and almost as many in orthography and in grammar as in mathematics, and yet it is generally supposed that mathematics is the block over which they all stumble.

Now, I am satisfied that a very large number of rejections arise from the fact that young men who go there with the examination staring them in the face become timid. They become nervous or alarmed at what they imagine to be the rigidity of the examination, and they consequently do not do themselves justice. That is the only way that I can account for the number of failures.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. SOWDEN. It does seem that the statement of the gentleman from West Virginia, that an unnecessarily high standard of education is required, is true, because my own experience teaches me the same thing. I recommended a candidate for appointment at the Naval Academy at Annapolis last fall, and he was a member of the sophomore class of Lafayette College, but was unable to pass the preliminary examination required at the academy.

Mr. WHEELER. In what did he fail?

Mr. SOWDEN. In mathematics; and I would like to know in consequence of this whether the standard is not entirely too high?

Mr. WHEELER. I think I may say from my own experience and observation, as well as the facts which I have been able to gather in reference to the subject and from a careful reading of the rules governing the general examinations and regulations of the academy, and particularly those rules relating to mathematical studies, that any young man who goes to a corn-field school-house and has been properly taught the merest rudiments of mathematics—and I do not refer to high-schools and academies, but I speak of a corn-field school-house, where, as a man once said, the logs were so far apart that you could throw a dog through [laughter]—I say that a young man who has had the training even in such a school as that, in some remote country district, would be able to pass this examination in mathematics at West Point, provided, of course, he had been grounded properly in the elementary principles of that study. That is all that is required. No high standard is exacted in that regard.

Mr. SOWDEN. I do not refer so particularly to the standard at West Point as to the standard at Annapolis, with which I am familiar; and I think that the failures of admission there arise mainly from the very high standard required, but also largely from the inflexible manner in which the rule is enforced.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The system that I adopt in my own district is to submit the matter to a board composed of educated persons, on which board I have one surgeon, usually, when I can get him, the president of our State medical association, or at least a member of that association, who examine all applicants, and I throw the appointment open to every young man in the district between the ages of fourteen and eighteen; but I have not to-day any person at Annapolis, because of the high standard they apply and because of the military rigidity and iron inflexibility of the application of the rules fixed by the management at that place.

I therefore concur most heartily with my friend from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON]. I say that the rules laid down at Annapolis, as applied by the naval officers in charge of the Naval Academy, are such as to make admittance simply possible to those who are thoroughly drilled and equipped by private tutors and at the best academies; and that the earnest young men standing at the head of their classes in the public schools are denied admission into the Naval Academy. That is my experience, and I am glad of this opportunity to add my testimony to that of others to the fact.

Mr. VIELE. I will say to the gentleman that the standard at the Naval Academy is much higher than at West Point, because they have no navy to put officers in.

Mr. WHEELER. As it may be interesting, I will now read a table showing the number of cadets admitted from each State and Territory from the establishment of the Military Academy to the present time:

At large	550	Mississippi	83
Alabama	126	Missouri	136
Arizona	5	Montana	4
Arkansas	38	Nebraska	12
California	38	Nevada	5
Colorado	7	New Hampshire	98
Connecticut	135	New Jersey	151
Central America	2	New Mexico	10
Dakota	7	North Carolina	239
Delaware	48	New York	859
District of Columbia	121	Ohio	372
Florida	29	Oregon	8
Georgia	181	Pennsylvania	605
Idaho	4	Rhode Island	54
Illinois	194	South America	3
Indiana	189	South Carolina	183
Iowa	68	Tennessee	234
Kansas	25	Texas	43
Kentucky	256	Utah	9
Louisiana	90	Vermont	120
Maine	125	Virginia	421

Massachusetts	300	West Virgina	20
Michigan	91	Wisconsin	70
Minnesota	28	Wyoming	7

The services of the graduates of the academy have reflected credit upon the institution, honor upon themselves, and glory upon our arms. They have shown scientific skill in combination, conspicuous ability in execution, and unequaled valor on the field of battle.

Of the gentlemen who were at West Point during the short period of my cadetship fifty-six have been killed in battle, and estimating the ratio of killed and wounded at 1 to 5, two hundred and eighty have been wounded. And as it has been remarked that most of the generals in the late war were West Point men, I will call attention to the fact that from the discovery of America to 1861, in all wars with other nations, the records of death show but ten American generals, while from 1861 to 1865, both sides being opposed by Americans, more than one hundred general officers fell while leading their triumphant columns. The soldiers of this country have exhibited a fortitude, endurance, and superb courage in combat unparalleled in the annals of any nation.

One hundred and thirty years ago, in the French and Indian wars, the soldierly valor of the colonists achieved great triumphs. From Lexington and Concord in 1775 to the glorious day at Yorktown in 1781 the untrained patriots of the infant Republic suffered under innumerable disadvantages while contending with the disciplined and veteran armies of Great Britain, and too often it was found that patient fortitude and heroic valor might be unavailingly opposed to regularly organized troops commanded by trained and skillful leaders, though both officers and men were animated by less commendable sentiments. In 1812 the same patriotic determination and devoted courage defended and maintained the honor of the country, but still under great disadvantages.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. We were able to give them a thrashing, though.

Mr. WHEELER. We gave them a thrashing, but we could have done it in much less time if we had had such officers as the Military Academy afterwards developed. That war lasted two years, and we suffered a loss of eighteen hundred and seventy-seven men killed and died of wounds, thirty-seven hundred and thirty-seven were wounded; but if we had been provided with more trained officers, it is probable it might have been brought to an end at a much less cost.

When the Mexican war came upon us but five graduates of the academy—namely, Colonel Gates, Lieutenant-Colonels Hitchcock, Fanning, and Loomis, and Major Bonneville—held rank in the line of the Army above the grade of captain, but the distinguished services of these trained officers, notwithstanding their subordinate rank, most of them being lieutenants, is a glorious part of the history of that conflict, and the skill with which they directed and led American courage contributed in no slight degree to our success.

In all our wars prior to 1861 our antagonists were not Anglo-Saxon Americans, and it was only when armies composed of this high order of manhood were opposed to each other that the military superiority of the people of the United States was incontestably established.

Now, since allusion has been made to the subject, I want to make a comparison between American prowess and that of other nations as shown by the losses in battle.

To illustrate my idea upon this point: History has recorded Waterloo as a desperately contested and bloody field, and yet the casualties of the allied armies under Wellington were less than 8 per cent., while at Shiloh, one of the early battles of our war, one side reported the killed and wounded at 9,616 and the other side lost 9,740 out of 34,000, making their casualties about 35 per cent. At Wagram Napoleon lost but about 5 per cent.; at Wurzburg the French lost but 3½ per cent, and yet the army gave up the field and retreated to the Rhine. At Racour Marshal Saxe lost but 2½ per cent.; at Zurich Massena lost but 8 per cent.; at Leignitz Frederick lost but 6½ per cent.; at Malplaquet Marlborough lost but 10 per cent., and at Ramillies the same distinguished commander lost but 6 per cent.; at Coutras Henry of Navarre was reported as cut to pieces, yet his loss was less than 10 per cent.; at Lodi Napoleon's loss was 1¼ per cent.; at Valmy Frederick William lost but 3 per cent., and at the great battles of Marengo and Austerlitz, sanguinary as they were, Napoleon lost an average of less than 14½ per cent.; at Magenta and Solferino, in 1859, the average loss of both armies was less than 9 per cent.; at Woerth, Specheran, Mars le Tour, Gravelotte, and Sedan, in 1870, the average loss was less than 12 per cent.; at Linden, where according to the poet Campbell's ringing lines—

> Every turf beneath their feet,
> Became a soldier's sepulcher,

Moreau lost but 4 and the Arch-Duke John but 7 per cent. in killed and wounded. Americans would hardly dignify this as a lively skirmish.

At Perryville, Murfreesborough, Chickamauga, Atlanta, Gettysburg, Mission Ridge, the Wilderness, and Spottsylvania the loss frequently reached and sometimes exceeded 40 per cent., and the average of killed and wounded on one side or the other was over 30 per cent.

Mr. LONG. Is not that partly owing to the increased destructive power of the arms of modern warfare?

Mr. WHEELER. I think it probably is attributable to that in some degree.

Mr. WILSON. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama if it is not also true that the increase in the destructive power of modern arms has been accompanied by a decrease in the proportion of casualties? Were not the losses in proportion to the numbers engaged much greater in ancient than in modern battles? Take, for instance, the battle of Cannæ.

Mr. WHEELER. In answer to the gentleman I will say that I regard all those accounts of armies being totally destroyed in battles of ancient times as mere fables. Nothing can be more absurd than their stories of one army entirely destroying another. For instance, Cæsar's muster-rolls were simply pieces of bark. A magistrate or some other functionary would report for duty in command of a company, and would have a piece of bark containing the names of, say, fifty or sixty men, and when they got into a battle, if the fight became too warm, this fellow would probably say, "Come boys, let's go home;" and they would disappear between sunset and daylight, and then they would be reported all killed. [Laughter]. That is the way those accounts were gotten up.

Mr. WILSON. That is certainly a revision of ancient history.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, ancient history has got to be revised on some points by common sense. [Renewed laughter].

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman will permit me, taking his explanation of the losses reported in ancient times, those losses were attributable more to the efficiency of the legs of the ancients than to the efficiency of their arms. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. Now, Mr. Chairman, to illustrate the impossibility of the accounts which have come down to us of the battles of ancient time being absolutely true, let us consider for a moment the organization of the Roman and Grecian armies. A Grecian army had ten ranks and the Roman phalanx had sixteen ranks. They would come up in two or three lines, so that an army of one hundred thousand men would not have more than three thousand men in the front. They would commence fighting with arrows and bows, each man protected by his shield and his armor; and the accounts show that often two men with these weapons and thus protected would fight a whole day without either killing the other. Now, supposing that only a few thousand men were engaged on each side, the men having their shields and being covered with armor, and the weapons being nothing but bows and sticks, and staves, and clubs, it would be impossible that more than one-twentieth of the number of men could have been killed that are reported in history. Of course there were instances where large armies surrounded and slaughtered small bodies of men. The three hundred at Thermopylæ were all killed. The same thing has occurred in modern warfare. A considerable portion of Braddock's army fell in the Indian ambuscade. The massacres by Indians of small garrisons and detachment of troops, from the first settlement of the country to the present day, have not been infrequent. The Dade massacre in Florida, and the Custer massacre at Big Horn, are fresh in our memories. It is also true that, within the present decade, King John of Abyssinia, with 40,000 men, captured and slaughtered some 5,000 men of the Khédive's army—only the mounted men and officers making their escape.

But this is very different from the assertions, put forth by careless or credulous historians, that armies of 100,000 or 200,000 men were slain by a force of equal or inferior strength.

Mr. MILLS. Still, is it not true that in proportion as the capacity to destroy human life has been increased by modern arms battles are decided with proportionately less loss of life?

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is a popular misapprehension, and the statistics illustrate it. In the campaigns prior to the time of Frederick the average loss was generally not more than 4 or 5 per cent. In some battles of those times the loss was much greater, but in very many it was merely nominal. Of course I have reached this conclusion by rejecting many exaggerations and extravagances which the experience of modern warfare, supported by reliable and authentic reports, shows us to have been wildly improbable, and wholly unreasonable.

In Frederick's time the average loss ran up to 5 or 6 per cent.; in Napoleon's time, to 8 or 9 per cent. In our war with Mexico we lost but one thousand five hundred and fifty-seven men killed and died of wounds, and three thousand four hundred and twenty wounded, out of one hundred thousand men enlisted; but this, as I have said, was due to the fact that the Americans, hurling themselves with characteristic dash upon the unequal and less dauntless foe, drove them from the field before they had time hardly to discharge their guns.

Mr. MILLS. No doubt a great many more soldiers die in hospital than are killed on the field.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to conclude by simply calling attention to the importance of having such intrepid soldiers as I say the Americans are led by commanders of the greatest skill.

Mr. KING. Do you place any value on volunteer officers?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, a great deal of value. I think that in the late war the volunteer officer showed as much intrepidity as was ever exhibited in any war, and as much skill as it was possible for any uneducated soldiers to show or was ever shown anywhere.

Mr. KING. Were they not educated and disciplined in the war? Did they not thus pass through the greatest military school of the world?

Mr. WHEELER. After two years we had on both sides volunteer officers of great distinction because of the experience they had acquired during those two years.

Mr. SYMES. Is it not the fact, however, that it cost millions of treasure and thousands of lives to educate them in that way in the field, on account of our deficiency in military education when the war opened?

Mr. WHEELER. I thank my friend for the suggestion. I think that is the fact; and it is for that reason I am endeavoring to impress this line of thought upon the House.

A MEMBER. There were too many political generals.

Mr. SYMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask my friend a question based upon the suggestion of my friend on the right [Mr. SYMES]. Were not the armies on both sides, in the war of secession, commanded by West Pointers?

Mr. WHEELER. They were to a great extent.

Mr. KING. Was it not absolutely so?

Mr. WHEELER. It was not absolutely so.

Mr. KING. I do not know of one leading commander who was not a West Pointer.

Mr. SYMES. There were hundreds.

Mr. KING. There were not hundreds of armies.

Mr. SYMES. There were hundreds of army corps.

Mr. KING. Nor army corps either.

Mr. WHEELER. General Butler was in command for a long time, and he was not a West Pointer.

Mr. OSBORNE. And General Logan.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; General Logan, who acted under General Sherman, and General Banks commanded an army.

Mr. KING. Those would be classed with the experienced volunteer officers to whom the gentleman referred a few moments ago. But their experience was not acquired under volunteer officers.

Mr. WHEELER. I think every member of this House will concur with me that Americans have shown themselves superior to all people in the world, whether as citizens in peace or in the camp and battle in war.

Should we not take every reasonable means to provide that in future wars such intrepid soldiers shall be led by the highest attainable skill and training. Can we conscientiously run any risk of permitting one drop of precious American blood to be spilled through the blunders and lack of skill of those who are to command them in battle?

Can we allow the honor, the integrity, and the safety of this great Republic to be jeopardized by any neglect in scientific military attainment?

Mr. SYMES. In other words, is it not recognized in all history as a fact that the way to command peace is to be prepared for war in times of emergency?

Mr. MILLS. There is very good authority for that.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

It has been said that the intricacies, the heights and depths of this science are such that they can not be fathomed in one generation; that the knowledge acquired during one period must be builded upon by those who follow.

Although our national honor and supremacy are now unimpeached, gentlemen should ask themselves if they are quite assured that, under all conditions, this our enviable position among nations can always be maintained.

Let every member of this House ask himself if it be possible for any nation, or for any two nations combined, to so place a land and naval force as to dictate to us the alternative of submitting to an ignominious peace or having New York and the adjacent cities reduced to ruins. Let the same question be asked regarding each of our other great seaports. Until the American Congress can confidently answer these questions in the negative, let us devote ourselves to perfecting our various means of defense.

Let us improve our military system.

Let us build up our Navy.

Let us construct adequate fortifications and strengthen our armaments.

To do these things properly let us use every available means to secure for our officers the best possible education and preparation for their important and responsible duties.

Let us consider this matter maturely, and so organize our military force that our power before the world may be such as to maintain our supremacy in a military sense, as we have in every other respect which has contributed to our greatness as a nation. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if no gentleman desires to continue the debate, I ask that the bill be now read by paragraphs.

Mr. MILLS. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. I want to give my experience about admittance to the Naval and Military Academies. Last summer I appointed a young man to the Naval Academy who was not quite fourteen years of age. The Secretary of the Navy passed over the June examination and authorized him to appear at the September examination in order that he might attain the proper age before reporting. He was born in Texas, was educated at home in Texas, and passed the examination without any difficulty, being but fourteen years of age. He is in the institution to-day, and I think will go through it and graduate as easily as any other young man who will enter the institution.

Some years ago, when I was first elected to Congress, I appointed a young man who was born almost in my own State—he was born in Missouri. We were in a somewhat wild condition after the war was over. Our school system was not thoroughly organized. This young man received all the education he ever obtained in the world in the little town where I was then living. I appointed him. He had barely attained his seventeenth year. He was admitted without any difficulty, without any coaching, without any hot-house treatment. He went through a common school in Texas, was admitted to the Military Academy, graduated with the highest honors, and is to-day a professor in Columbia College, in the State of Missouri.

There is a great mistake in all the talk to-day about the high standard of admission at these institutions. There are no doubt boys going to school in some parts of the country where the teachers are worthless, and where the schools are worthless.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the reason why you should advocate the education bill when it comes up.

Mr. MILLS. That will not better the thing a particle. You will have the same distinction between the teachers; some good ones, some bad ones; some boys well taught, and some badly taught. It is an old question whether the grade at which boys are admitted at these institutions is too high. It has been discussed here time and time again. For myself, I do not think the grade is much too high.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to give my experience.

Mr. MCADOO. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] a question.

Mr. WHEELER. This seems to be an experience meeting. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. In my district we have had six examinations for Annapolis and West Point——

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. This debate has no relation to the Military Academy bill. Gentlemen have been discussing every matter except this bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to limit debate.

Mr. STEELE. No one wants to debate.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed and that we proceed to consider the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that general debate on the bill be closed and that it be read by paragraphs for amendment under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk commenced and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the question is taken upon that motion I wish to say that in looking over the whole bill, comparing it with the present law, I believe the changes in the appropriations of the current year are almost entirely for improvements. In all else I believe this is substantially the same bill as that for the current year.

Mr. WHEELER. Substantially it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. With a few increases.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, and a few decreases.

Mr. HOLMAN. Making the aggregate less?

Mr. WHEELER. Thirteen thousand dollars less; and there are $7,000 of appropriations for new works; so that the bill is really $20,000 less.

Mr. BEACH. I can state to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill is a very moderate one.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out the last word with the view of asking the gentleman from Alabama what is the meaning of this statement that there are estimates for public works aggregating $394,000. What public works are these?

Mr. WHEELER. In the first place, the old hospital——

Mr. KING. Is that a public building?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. That has to be repaired and altered, and in fact rebuilt, at an expense of $3,500. Then we are to construct a breast-high wall along a road which has been considered dangerous. It has been in the course of construction for some years, and an additional appropriation is made this year to continue that work. Then we have also an item for repairs and extension of the cadet barracks, which are essential, at a cost of $5,000.

Mr. KING. My question had reference to the $394,000 of estimates.

Mr. WHEELER. Those are not in the bill. They are suggestions which were submitted, but they are not included in the bill. Not a single item submitted has been put upon the bill.

Mr. KING. Looking to new buildings being erected there?

Mr. WHEELER. Several buildings were proposed, but none of them were included in the bill. On pages 174 and 175 of the Book of Estimates there are a number of such items. One is for one hundred and sixty clothes presses and lockers, we omitted that; another is for a riding hall, we omitted that; another is painting the academic building, we have omitted that; another is alteration of the library building, that is omitted; another is for a gymnasium, we have omitted that; another is, $175,000 for a building for the department of chemistry, we have omitted that.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I simply desire to express my regret that the Committee on Military Affairs has not seen fit to make the appropriation recommended by the Secretary of War for a gymnasium at West Point. It is an absolute necessity, and I am very sorry that they have not appropriated for it.

Mr. WHEELER. They have a gymnasium there now, and the large appropriation that was asked for was not consistent with our idea of economy.

Mr. BEACH. The present gymnasium is in the sub-building of a stone structure, and is damp, noisome, and unfit for the cadets to exercise in.

Mr. WHEELER. I know it. I have worked there. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report this bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the SPEAKER having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5886) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. When a general appropriation bill is under discussion in general debate and a member has the floor and the discussion is as to the propriety of certain provisions in the bill, and the point of order is made that the member has no right to take the time of the gentleman who yields to him in discussing that proposition, and the Chair decides that the point of order is well taken, is that recorded in some place so that it may be seen hereafter?

The SPEAKER. All the proceedings of the House go into the RECORD.

Mr. STEELE. Will that decision go into a special book of precedents? I hope it will.

The SPEAKER. Nothing that transpires in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union goes into the Journal of the House, but all the proceedings of the House and of the Committee of the Whole are contained in the RECORD.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval a bill numbered 3019, entitled "An act to increase the pension of Abigail Smith," which bill originated in the House of Representatives.

This proposed legislation does injustice to a very worthy pensioner who was on the pension-roll at the time of the passage of the law which took effect on the 19th day of March last, and by virtue of which all pensions of her class were increased from $8 to $12 per month. Under this law she became entitled to her increased pension from the date of its passage. The bill now returned allows her the same amount; but if it became a law I suppose it would supersede her claim under the previous statute, and postpone the receipt by her of the increase to the date of the passage of the new law.

She would thus lose for nearly two months the increase of pension already secured to her.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 8, 1886.

The SPEAKER. Unless some other disposition is made of the message (and this is a privileged matter) this question is, Shall the bill pass, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. MATSON. If we are now to vote upon the question, I ask that the veto message be again read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that if it be desired the message can lie over, to be called up at some other time.

Mr. MATSON. I think that would be better.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would it not be proper to refer this message to the committee by which the bill was reported?

The SPEAKER. That can be done, if a motion to that effect be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the motion that the veto message just read, with the accompanying bill, be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDREW J. HILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following veto message of the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my approval House bill No. 1471, entitled "An act increasing the pension of Andrew J. Hill."

This bill doubles the pension which the person named therein has been receiving for a number of years. It appears from the report of the committee to which the bill was referred that a claim made by him for increased pension has been lately rejected by the Pension Bureau "on the ground that the claimant is now receiving a pension commensurate with the degree of disability found to exist."

The policy of frequently reversing, by special enactment, the decisions of the bureau invested by law with the examination of pension claims, fully equipped for such examination and which ought not to be suspected of any lack of liberality to our veteran soldiers, is exceedingly questionable. It may well be doubted if a committee of Congress has a better opportunity than such an agency to judge of the merits of these claims. If, however, there is any lack of power in the Pension Bureau for a full investigation it should be supplied; if the system adopted is inadequate to do full justice to claimants it should be corrected, and if there is a want of sympathy and consideration for the defenders of our Government the bureau should be reorganized.

The disposition to concede the most generous treatment to the disabled, aged, and needy among our veterans ought not to be restrained; and it must be admitted that in some cases justice and equity can not be done nor the charitable tendencies of the Government in favor of worthy objects of its care indulged under fixed rules. These conditions sometimes justify a resort to special legislation; but I am convinced that the interposition by special enactment in the granting of pensions should be rare and exceptional. In the nature of things if this is lightly done and upon slight occasion, an invitation is offered for the presentation of claims to Congress, which upon their merits could not survive the test of an examination by the Pension Bureau, and whose only hope of success depends upon sympathy, often misdirected, instead of right and justice. The instrumentality organized by law for the determination of pension claims is thus often overruled and discredited, and there is danger that in the end popular prejudice will be created against those who are worthily entitled to the bounty of the Government.

There has lately been presented to me on the same day, for approval, nearly two hundred and forty special bills granting and increasing pensions and restoring to the pension-list the names of parties which for cause have been dropped. To aid executive duty they were referred to the Pension Bureau for examination and report. After a delay absolutely necessary they have been returned to me within a few hours of the limit constitutionally permitted for executive action. Two hundred and thirty-two of these bills are thus classified:

Eighty-one cover cases in which favorable action by the Pension Bureau was denied by reason of the insufficiency of the testimony filed to prove the facts alleged.

These bills I have approved on the assumption that the claims were meritorious and that by the passage of the bills the Government has waived full proof of the facts.

Twenty-six of the bills cover claims rejected by the Pension Bureau because the evidence produced tended to prove that the alleged disability existed before the claimants' enlistment; twenty-one cover claims which have been denied by such bureau because the evidence tended to show that the disability, though contracted in the service, was not incurred in the line of duty; thirty-three cover claims which have been denied because the evidence tended to establish that the disability originated after the soldiers' discharge from the Army; forty-seven cover claims which have been denied because the general pension laws contain no provisions under which they could be allowed, and twenty-four of the claims have never been presented to the Pension Bureau.

I estimate the expenditure involved in these bills at more than $35,000 annually.

Though my conception of public duty leads me to the conclusion, upon the slight examination which I have been able to give such of these bills as are not comprised in the first class above mentioned, that many of them should be disapproved, I am utterly unable to submit within the time allowed me for that purpose my objections to the same.

They will therefore become operative without my approval.

A sufficient reason for the return of the particular bill now under consideration is found in the fact that it provides that the name of Andrew J. Hill be placed upon the pension-roll, while the records in the Pension Bureau, as well as a medical certificate made a part of the committee's report, disclose that the correct name of the intended beneficiary is Alfred J. Hill.

GROVER CLEVELAND

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 8, 1886.

The SPEAKER. If no motion proposing a different disposition of this subject be made, the question is——

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the message should be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I make that motion.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend the motion so as to refer the message to the Committee on Civil Service Reform.

Mr. MATSON. This bill may have been reported from the Committee on Pensions; I do not know what the fact is.

Mr. HOLMAN. The practice has been to refer messages of this character to the committee which originally reported the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause an examination to be made to ascertain by what committee this bill was reported.

Mr. STEELE. At the request of the gentleman from Virginia I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. It would be entirely safe, I think, to refer the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The message will be printed, and, with the bill, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The title of the bill first in order will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask that this bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. There being objection, the committee will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill had been reached and objection had been made to passing it over.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be directed to pass over House bill No. 6392.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the next general appropriation bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of this bill be dispensed with.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The following paragraph was read:

Extra-duty pay: For enlisted men for service in hospital, and for general-service clerks and messengers at Army, division, department, and district headquarters, at the headquarters of the general recruiting service, at recruiting depots, and at West Point, New York, at the rates per diem fixed by law, $22,721.25: Provided, That the number of such general-service clerks to be paid out of this sum shall not exceed one hundred, and the number of messengers to be paid shall not exceed thirty-five.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a point of order. I make the point that the paragraph just read is squarely in contravention of the third subdivision of Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order can not be made now. The gentleman can make the point when this paragraph is reached for consideration. The bill is now being read merely for information.

Mr. PRICE. Then I reserve the point of order and will make it at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. All points of order are reserved.

The Clerk resumed the reading, but was interrupted by

Mr. PRICE, who said: Mr. Chairman, I called for the reading of this bill because I supposed it necessary under the rules that points of order, several of which I propose to make, should be made during the first reading. If that is not true, if such points can be made when the bill is read by paragraphs, I withdraw my objection to dispensing with the first reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] withdraws his objection. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none, and the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been prepared by the Committee on Military Affairs after careful examination of the needs and wants of the Army. They have made appropriations in such manner as in their judgment will meet with the wants of the service, and omitted everything in their judgment unnecessary for the service.

The bill has been upon the Calendar for two months and more, with the report of the committee accompanying it. From that I presume it has been carefully examined and investigated by every member of the House, so that such objectionable points as may be in the bill can be readily discussed and disposed of under the five-minute rule. I therefore move, sir, the committee rise for the purpose of limiting the general debate on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BRAGG. I move, Mr. Speaker, that all general debate on the Army appropriation bill be limited to one minute, when its consideration shall be resumed in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PRICE. On that motion I demand a division of the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 15.

Mr. PRICE. No quorum.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to know what these gentlemen want. What do they want?

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum having been made, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. PRICE and Mr. BRAGG.

Mr. BRAGG. What do these gentlemen want?

Mr. PRICE. I will answer the gentleman from Wisconsin and say we want this bill discussed and passed, if passed at all, subject to the discussions and points of order under the rules of this House. If subject to a half a dozen points of order, as I think it is, I insist it shall not be passed until those points of order have been decided.

Mr. BRAGG. What I wish to get at is this: How much general talk do you want?

Mr. HAMMOND. Let me say to the gentleman on the other side his points of order can be made during the five-minute debate as the bill is read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. LONG. My colleague [Mr. ROCKWELL] wants some time in general debate on the bill.

Mr. PRICE. I will make a proposition for two hours of general debate to the gentleman, if that will suit him.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir, it will not suit me.

The House then proceeded to vote on the pending question by tellers.

Mr. PRICE. The point of no quorum is withdrawn, upon the understanding debate on our side shall be confined to one hour; that is, it is to be given to those who oppose the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin modify his motion to one hour?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that will be the order of the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and by order of the House all general debate has been limited to one hour.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I yield so much time as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL] may desire.

Mr. ROCKWELL took the floor.

Mr. BRAGG. Let us understand as to how this time is to be divided.

The CHAIRMAN. No arrangement so far as the Chair is advised has been made as to the division of time. The gentleman on the left [Mr. PRICE] will be recognized to control the time in opposition to the bill, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] on the right to control the time in favor of the bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is the understanding as to the division of the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not answer. The House limited general debate to one hour.

Mr. PRICE. One hour on this side. I distinctly said the compromise was made on the understanding we were to have one hour on this side of the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. Nothing of that kind was said at the time so far as we could hear. I understood the general debate was limited to one hour.

Mr. PRICE. It was just as I stated it—exactly so, the Official Reporter states, notwithstanding the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MORRISON. Take it, then.

Mr. BRAGG. If that condition was included I was not aware of it. It makes no difference, however, as I did not intend to use any time in general debate in support of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised the gentleman from Wisconsin stated he would withdraw the point of order of no quorum if one hour of general debate was given in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. It was said, I think, afterward and not at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The House limited debate to one hour, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] to occupy as much of that hour as he may desire.

Mr. PRICE. I have yielded the floor to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor, and will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the bill now before the committee, I want to call attention to its twentieth page, and to the item of appropriation made for the manufacture of arms, which is placed at $300,000. The annual appropriation for the last four years for the same purpose has been $400,000, showing a reduction in this instance of $100,000. As I happen to live in the district in which the Springfield armory is situated, and it being the only armory in the United States where arms are manufactured for the Government, I deem it my duty to present a few statements showing why it is necessary that the annual appropriation should be continued at the same amount as for the past four years.

The committee give as a reason for the reduction that they believe it is not the policy of the Government in this age of improvement to manufacture and keep in store any very large quantity of ordnance and ordnance stores over and above what are necessary for present use.

There are certain arguments that can be submitted in favor of maintaining the usual appropriation. It is in the interest of the United States Government to maintain this institution in its present state of efficiency.

During the war large appropriations were made for this armory; but for several years following the war no appropriations were made, but the large appropriation of 1866 was used. Afterward the annual appropriations were increased, until four years ago $400,000 was fixed as the limit. I believe that amount should be allowed now, because from the best information I can obtain that amount will produce the arm at the least cost, as well as keep together the skilled workmen now employed and give a nucleus for increased capacity for manufacturing arms when necessity shall arise.

I have taken pains in this matter to see if there were any other arms which could be manufactured to advantage by this Government, and I desire to have the Clerk read in relation to the arms manufactured at Springfield a report from the Ordnance Bureau, dated December 15, 1885, and addressed to the Secretary of War, showing that the Springfield rifle is the best service rifle, according to the actual tests, that the Government can make.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 15, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a tabular statement of the results reached in the trial of a number of each of the magazine rifles issued to the troops. These guns—the Lee, Chaffee-Reece, and Hotchkiss—were recommended for trial, in the order named, by a board of officers convened in 1881 under authority of law, and were distributed to the Army for the purpose by the Lieutenant-General of the Army.

The reports from one hundred and forty-nine companies have been received, examined, and tabulated, and the results are as follows:

Comparing the three magazine guns with each other the reports are: For the Lee, 55; Chaffee-Reece, 14; Hotchkiss, 26. As magazine guns, therefore the reports are largely in favor of the Lee.

Comparing the magazine guns with each other and with the Springfield service rifle as single loaders, the preference is for the Springfield, as follows: For the Lee, 5; Chaffee-Reece, 0; Hotchkiss, 1; Springfield, 21.

Comparing the magazine guns and the Springfield for all uses, the preference is for the Lee, 10; Chaffee-Reece, 3; Hotchkiss, 4; and the Springfield 46, being largely in favor of the Springfield.

In the column of objections in the tabular statement will be found a brief of the objections given in each report.

After a careful consideration of these reports, I am satisfied that neither of these magazine guns should be adopted and substituted for the Springfield rifle as the arm for the service.

I have been and am an advocate for a magazine gun, but it would seem the part of wisdom to postpone for the present any further efforts toward the adoption of a suitable magazine arm for the service.

The Springfield rifle gives such general satisfaction to the Army that we can safely wait a reasonable time for further developments of magazine systems.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. ROCKWELL. In addition, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that in 1865 there were made at this armory about five thousand arms of a pattern better known as the "Allen" breech-loading gun. Since that time improvements have been made from that device from experiments in the field and from experiments made from time to time, in order to overcome the weak points, and the Government has had an opportunity to take advantage of the reports showing the imperfections, and improvements have been made until it now is one of the most perfect of military arms. The models are of 1865, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1873, and 1884, showing a constant improvement in the arm keeping pace with the improvement of other arms.

Now, as to the economy of maintaining the Springfield armory, I desire to present here and to have the Clerk read a statement from a letter of the then Secretary of War, to be found in Senate Executive Document No. 17, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, showing that the Springfield armory has been one of the best business investments the Government has ever entered into.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement of the cost of Springfield rifle-muskets, from 1861 to 1865, inclusive, made at the Springfield armory.

The following are the years embraced in this statement:	Number of arms turned over in each year.	Price, each.	Total cost of arms turned over each year.	Amount charged the arm each year for repairs and depreciation of tools, machinery, fixtures, and buildings, &c.
Year ending June 30—
1861	13,802	$13.1164	$181,049 67	$37,492 37
1862	102,410	11.81624	1,210,101 70	303,686 13
1863	217,784	10.696418	2,329,598 09	360,357 92
1864	276,200	10.69019	2,952,630 88	491,573 79
1865	195,341	14.1205	2,758,312 97	571,459 20
Total	805,537	11.70+	9,431,693 31	1,764,569 41

From the above statement it appears that during the rebellion, or from 1861 to 1865, inclusive, there were made at the Springfield armory 805,537 rifle-muskets, at a cost of $11.70 each.

This sum included the cost of all the labor, materials, direct supervision, inspection, condemnation of defective parts, 6 per cent. on plant, and also included the depreciation in value from use of tools, fixtures, machinery, buildings, &c.

This depreciation was about $1,764,569.41, or more than $2 per musket.

As the Government does not insure against fire or accidents, it does what is equivalent—protects the property of the armory by the employment of a large force of watchmen and a steam fire-engine, the cost of maintaining which is included in the $11.70.

The total expenditures at the Springfield armory from its establishment to the 1st of March, 1872, amounted to $3,103,485.80 for lands, buildings, iron and wooden fences, mill-dams, canals, sewers, shop-fixtures, and new machinery. The amount charged to the depreciation of these items, as stated above, from 1861 to 1865, was $1,764,569.41, or more than half of the original value.

The cost of contract arms, as given in the accompanying list, shows that they cost an average of $20 each, to which is to be added $1 each for inspection and proof, making the cost of contract arms to the United States at $21 each, or about $9 each more than the cost of those made at the armory,

As the United States manufactured eight hundred and five thousand five hundred and thirty-seven muskets during the rebellion, the saving of $9 on each makes a saving to the United States of $7,249,833 during the years 1861-'65, or a sum more than twice the entire cost of the Springfield armory since its establishment.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, I claim that the appropriation of $400,000 is the smallest appropriation that will keep the plant in proper order and keep the skilled workmen there. It is necessary in a matter of this kind to keep skilled workmen together. Here are men trained in the art of making arms who have been there for years. This armory was established in 1795, and many of the workmen now employed are the sons of former workmen, men who have been brought up and trained in the class of work required for the manufacture of arms.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me ask the gentleman if the principle of interchangeability of the different parts of one piece to another was not of private invention, private enterprise, and not the result of examination or experiments at Springfield?

Mr. ROCKWELL. I have no doubt that improvements have been adopted at the Springfield armory, since it is willing to accept every improvement suggested by private establishments either in this country or in Europe. I admit that many things have been done outside of the Springfield armory. But my suggestion was that there are skilled workmen there, and if they are discharged and scattered the Government can not again get them together, and therefore it is necessary to have this uniform annual appropriation in order to maintain the armory which is in one sense the defense of the Government of the United States.

I say further that of this $400,000 appropriated heretofore, in its expenditure at the armory 64 per cent. has been paid for labor, and the cutting down of the appropriation from $400,000 to $300,000 will seriously cripple that institution, and we are not prepared to do that.

It is shown from the record read that it is the best paying institution the Government ever undertook to carry on. Taking into account all the depreciation of property since 1795, there is shown a great gain to the Government. And I say the appropriation for an institution like that, managed by skilled Army officers detailed for the purpose, can not be thrown aside because, perchance, the chairman of the Military Committee wants to cut something out of the Army bill here and there, in order to apply the supposed savings elsewhere and to promote some other useful purpose, so that the total amount of appropriations in all these bills shall not exceed the usual sum. I am in favor of the training schools for cavalry and of the barracks for soldiers that the chairman of the committee wants; and I say let us vote the money for those purposes, but do not let us cripple another arm of the service to do it. There is no economy in such a proceeding. It is pernicious in practice and wrong in principle.

Furthermore, these skilled laborers at Springfield, who have sent their petition to Congress, many of them belonging to the Knights of Labor, have a right to be heard since they have served the Government so long and faithfully. They should not be discharged now when they have learned the skill in their special departments that counts greatly for the benefit of the Government. We can not afford, Mr. Chairman, to cripple the armory at Springfield.

But, sir, it may be said, there is an annual appropriation under the law of 1808 of $200,000 for arming and equipping the militia, and that some of that also is expended at the Springfield armory. I admit it. We had the last year about $100,000 of that sum expended in one way or another for arms and parts of arms that came from the Springfield armory, and we need that $100,000 each year to support the armory and make it pay the Government.

The arms there cost less than $12, and no firm I know of anywhere can make an arm of equal worth for that sum. We have gotten the appropriation down to the lowest point. Now look at it for a moment. We made more than thirty-six thousand arms the year before last, and last year with the improved machinery, largely the result of the experiments and the skill freely given by these mechanics to the Government, we made forty thousand arms. Now, I say if you reduce the appropriations for the armory and reduce the moneys that annually go to its support you will make the arms cost more and seriously cripple the institution.

There is no question that the appropriation now has reached that point where the best and cheapest arms are made. And if that is so, then it is economy for the Government to keep the appropriation where it is. It is only a common-sense business proposition that I am urging upon this House.

Mr. BUCK. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. ROCKWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCK. What is the cost of a Springfield musket at the Springfield armory?

Mr. ROCKWELL. Less than $12.

Mr. BUCK. And why is it that the United States Government charges the respective States, under the law of 1808 the sum of $15.50?

Mr. ROCKWELL. That is a question for the United States Government to answer.

Mr. BUCK. That is what they charge.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I do not care what they charge as regards my present argument. If there is anything wrong in what is done by the Government, correct it. But do not lay it to the charge of the Springfield armory that they can make arms and supply them to the Government $3 cheaper than the Government itself charges for them.

It will be said there is a bill proposed for arming the militia. It may not pass. If such a bill should pass it is claimed that the Springfield armory will get more, and therefore that this appropriation may be reduced to $300,000. What can be more ridiculous? Why not make the annual appropriation what is right and proper? The militia bill may not pass. The same principle applies to this appropriation as to every other. Make your appropriation right and just in the first place.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ROCKWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. If you succeed in increasing the appropriation in the Army bill $100,000, will you as the representative of the Springfield armory consent to strike $100,000 out of the militia bill?

Mr. ROCKWELL. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I am a Representative of the Congress of the United States, and not of the Springfield armory. I stand here in my Representative capacity. I did not understand the whole of the gentleman's question. He dropped his voice toward its close.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman from Massachusetts said we were appropriating for the armory here. Then it might not be proper to put it in there.

Mr. ROCKWELL, I said this: that this annual appropriation had been $400,000; and that the argument that because there might be a militia bill passed of $400,000—I believe that is the amount of the bill now in the Senate—and that some of that money might go to the Springfield armory, was not a good business argument, because that bill might fail. If it should pass, the authorities of the United States would not be obliged to order for the militia of the States any more arms from the Springfield armory than they might otherwise order.

Mr. BRAGG. I asked you whether you were willing if we should yield the $400,000 to give up the $100,000 in the other bill?

Mr. ROCKWELL. I am willing to consider that bill when it comes before us. When that question presents itself I will be ready to meet it. I have not read that bill as yet.

I am willing the Springfield armory should have $500,000 a year, $400,000 through the Army appropriation bill and $100,000 from the old law of 1808. The amount from that law, however, has varied from year to year; sometimes it has been $50,000. And I am willing personally to stop there. I think that answers fully the question the gentleman from Wisconsin has addressed to me.

Mr. Chairman, this is simply a business proposition. Shall we appropriate the usual annual amount for this armory, which everybody knows who knows anything about it is the best run institution we have, and which is running now upon the proper plan? Or shall we reduce it because, perchance, the chairman of the committee proposes to put the money somewhere else? In a statement made here the other day the gentleman said after all he would have $300,000 saved on this bill. What is the object of having that $300,000 saved? Is it exercising a spirit of wise economy to have $300,000 saved and then go to work and put your Springfield armory—the only armory where you manufacture arms in this country—put it in such a shape that you can not make your arms as cheaply as you do now, and must discharge some of your skilled workmen? I say as a business proposition the argument is in favor of leaving the appropriation for this armory where it is now. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. PRICE. The provision in this bill to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL] has called the attention of the committee as objectionable needs no further argument on my part. What I desire to do is to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the bill in two of its provisions is squarely in violation of the statutes of the United States; secondly, that in five of its provisions it is open to points of order as contrary to the provision in subdivision 3, Rule XXI, of the rules governing this House.

Section 3, Rule XXI, of the rules of the House of Representatives, contains this clause:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Subject to a point of order under this clause are the following sections of the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army.

In lines 36 to 43, inclusive, the following changes existing law:

Provided, That the number of such general-service clerks to be paid out of this sum shall not exceed one hundred, and the number of such messengers to be paid shall not exceed thirty-five. For payment to enlisted men serving as general-service clerks and messengers, one hundred and thirty-five in all, for commutation of fuel and quarters, $29,160.

There is no statute on this subject. It is governed by Army regulations, which fix the number of general-service clerks and messengers at one hundred and seventy-one. See paragraph 145, Army Regulations, as amended by General Orders 104 of 1884 and 47 of 1885.

Army regulations must be construed as "existing law," for the Supreme Court held (Gratiot vs. The United States, 4 Howard, page 80) that—

The Army regulations made pursuant to the authority conferred by Congress have the force of law.

Section 2, act of July 23, 1879, provides—

That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause all the regulations of the Army and general orders now in force, to be codified and published to the Army, and to defray the expenses thereof out of the contingent fund of the Army.

This codification was approved and published by an order of the Secretary of War, dated February 17, 1881.

The Supreme Court also held (United States vs. Freeman, 3 Howard, page 566) that—

The Army regulations when sanctioned by the President have the force of law.

And in the case of United States vs. Eliason, 16 Peters, 291, that—

The power of the Executive to establish rules and regulations for the government of the Army is undoubted. The power to establish implies the power to modify or repeal or to create anew. The Secretary of War is the regular constitutional organ of the President for the administration of the military establishment of the nation, and the rules and orders publicly promulgated through him must be received as the act of the Executive, and as such be binding upon all within the sphere of his legal and constitutional authority. Such regulations can not be questioned or defied because they may be thought unwise or mistaken.

The Attorney-General (Caleb Cushing), January 1, 1857, gave the following opinion on the subject of Army regulations:

The War Department, representing the President in the administration of the Army, has permanent authority from Congress to make regulations in aid and complement of the statutes.

Therefore the number of general-service clerks and messengers being fixed by Army regulations, which have the "force of law," there being no statute on the subject, the attempt to reduce the number of such general-service clerks and messengers by a provision in the Army appropriation bill would be a change of "existing law," and susceptible to a point of order under the third clause of Rule XXI. On the other hand, if Army regulations are not "existing law," then there is no authority for the expenditure contemplated in the section of the Army bill referred to, and that section, and all subsequent sections of the bill dependent on Army regulations for their support are susceptible to a point of order under the first clause of section 3 of Rule XXI:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The following proviso in lines 43 to 49, inclusive, of the Army bill also changes existing law:

Provided, That no part of such sum shall be paid for commutation of quarters at a greater rate to each man than $12 per month, and for commutation of fuel at a greater rate to each man than $6 per month: Provided, further, That no such payment for extra-duty pay or for commutation shall be made without the men being regularly mustered therefor.

Paragraph 145, Army Regulations, as amended by general orders 104 of 1884, the only law on this subject, fixes the rate of commutation of quarters at $21 per month and commutation of fuel at $9 per month for enlisted men serving as general-service clerks and messengers. It also provides for the muster of men for extra-duty pay. Muster for commutation is not required by Army regulations. It should be also borne in mind that this section transfers the payment of commutation from the Quartermaster's Department to the Pay Department of the Army.

Again the following, in lines 164 to 169, inclusive, changes existing law:

Provided, That in disbursing this allowance, the maximum sum to be allowed and paid shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled route, and in addition thereto the cost of transportation actually paid, exclusive of sleeping or parlor-car fare.

Section 1273, Revised Statutes, as amended by section 2 of the act approved July 24, 1876, fixes the rate of mileage at 8 cents per mile.

The following, in lines 170 to 173, inclusive, of the bill, is another change of existing law:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall be considered but one fund.

Section 3623, Revised Statutes, passed in 1809, provides:

All officers, agents, or other persons receiving public moneys shall render distinct accounts of the application thereof according to the appropriation under which the same may have been advanced to them.

Section 3678, Revised Statutes, enacts:

All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others.

The following provision of the bill, in lines 217 to 223, inclusive, also changes existing law:

Nor shall any money so appropriated be paid for commutation of rations except as above authorized, and except as is authorized by Army regulations to enlisted men on furlough, and ordnance-sergeants on duty at ungarrisoned posts, and to enlisted men other than the Signal Service, who are stationed alone at places where rations can not be economically issued.

Paragraph 145, Army Regulations, provides commutation of rations for general-service men who are excluded by the provisions of the above section.

The following, in lines 226 to 228, inclusive, of the bill, is also a change of existing law:

And no compensation or salary so paid shall exceed the pay of a fourth-class clerk as graded and fixed in Army regulations.

Paragraph 1422, Army Regulations, provides as follows:

Except for the Corps of Engineers, the grades of pay of clerks and other employés under the staff departments of the Army, whose salaries are not fixed by law, are hereby authorized as follows:

There shall be six classes of clerkships, and each clerk or employé within the scope of this regulation shall be graded for pay in accordance therewith, namely:

Class.	Pay per month.	Pay per annum.
First class	$83.33	$1,000
Second class	100.00	1,200
Third class	116.66	1,400
Fourth class	133.33	1,600
Fifth class	150.00	1,800
Sixth class	166.66	2,000

The above paragraph of Army regulations fixes the pay of clerks and other employés of the Subsistence, Quartermaster's, and Ordnance Departments of the Army. The only statute on the subject of the pay of these clerks is to be found in a clause of the Army appropriation bills for the last two fiscal years, abolishing the grade of sixth-class clerk in the Quartermaster's Department; hence the attempt to limit the salary or compensation of clerks of the Subsistence, Quartermaster's, and Ordnance Departments of the Army to the pay of a fourth-class clerk, as graded and fixed in Army regulations, is a change of existing law.

The following provision of the bill, in lines 247 to 251, inclusive, is also a change of existing law:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done by contract after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice for competition.

Paragraph 1475, Army Regulations, provides—

But the commander of an army, department, or division, whenever in his judgment it may be conducive to the public interests, may, in addition to the orders printed under the provisions of paragraph 1885, Army Regulations, order all forms of printing and advertising for supplies or services, except advertisements to be published in newspapers.

Paragraph 1885, Army Regulations, provides that—

The commander of an army, department, or division may direct orders to be printed when the requisite dispatch and the number to be distributed make it necessary, and for that purpose the requisite paper is authorized. The necessity will be set out in the order for the printing, or certified on the account.

There is a further change of existing law in lines 370 to 373, inclusive:

And that no employé paid therefrom shall receive as salary or compensation a greater sum per month than the salary of a clerk of the fourth class, as graded and fixed in Army regulations.

This section refers to the pay of clerks and other employés of the Quartermaster's Department, whose salaries or compensations are fixed by paragraph 1422, Army Regulations, which I have already cited.

The Army Regulations distinctly provide that there shall be six classes of clerks; and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided in three different instances that such regulations have the force of law. Yet this existing law, fixed and established by Army regulations, and indorsed by law, by the Supreme Court of the United States, you propose to set aside by a provision which has no business in an appropriation bill.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. Suppose the Secretary of War should issue an order in the form of an Army regulation providing that hereafter the salary of clerks should be $300 per month. Does the gentleman think that would have the force and effect of law?

Mr. PRICE. I refer the gentleman from Indiana to the decisions of the Supreme Court, a tribunal authorized to decide what is the law. That court has said that these regulations properly compiled and published under authority have the effect and binding force of law. Why should the gentleman appeal to me? I can not add strength or force to a decision of the Supreme Court. I say that what these Army regulations, having the force of law, have already fixed this bill proposes to change.

Mr. STEELE. Such regulations bind the soldier, but do not bind Congress.

Mr. PRICE. Another provision of the bill which changes existing law is in lines 466 to 470 inclusive:

Provided, That no clerk paid from the appropriation for the Ordnance Department shall receive as salary or compensation a greater sum per month than the salary of a fourth-class clerk as graded and fixed in the Army regulations.

This is in conflict with paragraph 1422, Army Regulations, already cited. I say that you can not change these classes and readjust these arrangements by an appropriation bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. Legislation in this form is outside of their jurisdiction.

It is very possible that some of these provisions of law to which I have referred should not continue in force; but my point is that if you undertake to change the law you must do it not upon an appropriation bill, but by an independent measure reported in this House, just as the Committee on Military Affairs, within forty-eight hours, has had before this House for discussion a bill providing for some of these same changes which this appropriation bill proposes to make in direct conflict with existing law.

The purpose may be excellent; but the committee are circumscribed and hedged in by the rules of this House defining and limiting their powers. We have seen the evils arising heretofore from the interpolation of legislation into appropriation bills in the form of "riders;" and this House, at the opening of the present session, by an overwhelming majority determined that it would wipe out the abuses of that system. Yet in spite of that clearly expressed policy then adopted by the House this bill, in five separate and distinct provisions, proposes to interfere with provisions of law as established by the Army regulations; and in two more it proposes new legislation in direct contravention of the Revised Statutes of the United States. These are abuses to which I desire to call the attention of the House at this time. When the question comes up at a later stage of the bill I shall not probably make any extended remarks. No doubt these provisions can be struck out on a motion to amend; but in my opinion the proper course would be at a suitable time to recommit the bill with instructions to the committee to confine themselves to their legitimate powers and duties under the rules of the House. I am willing to follow the committee in any attempt they may make to advance good government, to reduce expenses, to improve the efficiency of the Army; but I am not willing that the rules which have been established here for your government and mine shall be thus trampled upon and ignored by the Committee on Military Affairs or any other committee.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the residue of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has control of all the time for general debate. To whom does he yield?

Mr. PRICE. I am willing to yield to any gentleman on our side or to any gentleman on the other side who may desire the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that all general debate, by order of the House, was limited to one hour; and the gentleman from Wisconsin himself was recognized to control that hour. Therefore, there is no time to reserve, and if the gentleman desires to take up the hour it must be done now.

Mr. PRICE. If any gentleman wants to take the floor on this side I will give it to him, or if not, I will give it to the other side. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BRAGG. No other gentleman desiring to debate, I move to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL] reserved ten minutes of his time.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I can get five minutes later on my proposed amendment, and I do not care for the ten minutes now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must take it now, if at all.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I will wait until the five-minute debate.

The CHAIRMAN. No further time being desired in general debate, the House now proceeds with the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

FOURTH OF JULY CLAIMS.

The committee informally rose; and

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 4731) for allowances of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department; when the Speaker signed the same.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENLISTED MEN.

For pay proper of the enlisted men of all grades, $4,303,108.

Extra-duty pay: For enlisted men for service in hospital, and for general-service clerks and messengers at Army, division, department, and district headquarters, at the headquarters of the general recruiting service, at recruiting depots, and at West Point, N. Y., at the rates per diem fixed by law, $22,721.25: Provided, That the number of such general-service clerks to be paid out of this sum shall not exceed one hundred, and the number of such messengers to be paid shall not exceed thirty-five.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point the proviso just read by the Clerk is in conflict with section 145 of the Army Regulations, and therefore, under the rules of this House, not being in accordance with existing law, it should be excluded from this bill. I move the proviso be stricken out.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I move in line 38 to strike out one hundred and insert one hundred and three, and in line 39 to strike out thirty-five and insert forty-five; so the proviso will read:

Provided, That the number of such general-service clerks to be paid out of this sum shall not exceed one hundred and three, and the number of such messengers to be paid shall not exceed forty-five.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to enlisted men serving as general-service clerks and messengers, one hundred and thirty-five in all, for commutation of fuel and quarters, $29,160: Provided, That no part of such sum shall be paid for commutation of quarters at a greater rate to each man than $12 per month, and for commutation of fuel at a greater rate to each man than $6 per month: Provided further, That no such payment for extra-duty pay or for commutation shall be made without the men being regularly mustered therefor.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point of order that the proviso in lines 43 to 47 is objectionable, as being in conflict with Army regulations, and therefore changes existing law. The second proviso is equally objectionable.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I perhaps do not appreciate the force of the point of order, but I never knew, while the military regulation might be existing law for the government of the Army, it had anything to do with restricting the legislative power of the Congress of the United States. It is simply proposed to limit the pay not fixed by law.

The general order which was alluded to by the gentleman who made the point of order is not an order ever made by the President of the United States; neither is it an order made under any law of Congress, or a regulation of the Army, or fixed in any manner by any proper authority so as to come within the definition of Army regulations prescribed by the laws of the United States.

This is simply a regulation for the expenditure of money which we are now about to appropriate, and which we have a right to make.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I may have placed a wrong construction upon this matter. I have got a large book, which lies upon my desk, which I understand to be the Army Regulations, approved as such, and published under a provision of law which has been read here, which distinctly declares such shall be the regulation.

Now, this bill just as distinctly and positively contravenes that proposition. How far the regulations, as placed in the book, are correct, or how far the gentleman shall be permitted to say here that such regulations, as are admitted by the decisions of the Supreme Court to be within the law, shall have the force of law, or how far they shall not have the force of law, I do not know.

I assume that they are all regulations of the Army, whether relating to enlistment or the discharge of men; to employment, commutation, equipment, courts-martial, or any other military features, all of which appear in this book; and this provision of the bill is in relation to an expenditure in that Department with reference to a subject fixed by the War Department, published as such and approved by the President, and laid upon our tables as the law governing the Army, so far as they have a right to make law. I have referred the gentleman to several decisions of the Supreme Court, which enunciate the doctrine that they have a right to make such regulations, and that they have the force of law. And going a step further, I find in the rules of this House a provision which says we shall not insert in any appropriation bill a provision changing existing law.

Now, I am not logician enough to get away from that condition of affairs, or the irresistible conclusion that this proviso is in conflict with existing law, and, therefore, is in violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a single word upon the point of order. I am not sufficiently conversant with the wants of the service to determine or have an opinion as to whether this legislation proposed upon the bill is wise or not. Its bare presence here is, however, a change of law, or the making of a new law. It might be very wise if it came in a bill other than an appropriation bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Now, what is the law? The Revised Statutes authorize the making of all Army regulations. Army regulations have been made in pursuance of that statute, which fixes the commutation of quarters at $21.

Mr. BRAGG. That is no Army regulation at all.

Mr. CANNON. What is it?

Mr. BRAGG. It is an order. Let me call the gentleman's attention to it for a moment, for I think I can make him understand.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. BRAGG. We reduced commutation, or forbade any commutation, by a provision of law incorporated in an appropriation bill in the Forty-sixth Congress, at a greater rate than $12 a room to a lieutenant.

There is no law giving commutation of rations or commutation of fuel or quarters to an enlisted man at all; there never was, and there never ought to be.

But this provision is a means devised by a military order to pay men who were entitled to more pay than they could otherwise get, and for that reason we limited these payments so as to bring it within the law; and that is all there is of it.

Mr. CANNON. I have said I am not sufficiently familiar with military affairs to be able to express an opinion as to the merits of this proposition, nor am I sufficiently familiar with the law or the Army regulations to tell what the law is upon the subject. But I do say that if payments for a similar appropriation to this for the current year have been different from the provision fixed in this bill, they must have been under the law. Not only that, but these payments must have passed the scrutiny of the Auditor and the Comptroller of the Treasury, without they had been authorized by the Secretary of War.

Now, the gentleman comes in and says to correct a practice—to correct a payment touching these matters that have passed the accounting officers of the Treasury, and therefore necessarily in pursuance of existing law—the gentleman seeks to come in and change that existing law, and make a law under which such provision shall not prevail in future.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me ask the gentleman, who is a member of the economical Committee on Appropriations, a question. Suppose the Comptroller or the Auditor of the Treasury had been year after year passing $100,000 on accounts without law at all, I ask would that make it a legal transaction? The committee found that such payments had been made without authority of law; and does the gentleman hold, therefore, that it should receive the sanction of law, and that it would take a positive act of Congress to prevent an illegal payment of money?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if the Comptroller of the Treasury or if the Auditor passes accounts illegally and corruptly, then the remedy is by way of impeachment. However, the Comptroller and the Auditor construe the law. They have a separate duty to that performed by the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself, and that is they have to say what expenditures are in pursuance of law and what are not in pursuance of law; and when that construction is given, when that precedent is made, the law is construed and is to stand until it is changed by legislative enactment or until the precedent is reversed by the proper judicial authority.

And the Comptroller of the Treasury does exercise judical power. In the early days of the Republic executions were issued upon his findings. Now, I say again, while I have no information as to the propriety of this legislation, its presence here is a confession that it is to change the law, or to make law where none now exists. If that be the case, then under the cast-iron rule that has been adopted by this House, that no legislation, good, wise, or indifferent, shall be written into or upon a general appropriation bill, when the point of order is made that obliterates it.

Mr. STEELE. Heretofore legislation has been allowed upon appropriation bills. Under the present rules of the House it is not allowed. The committee sought diligently to find any law by which the enlisted men were allowed commutation for quarters and for fuel. We were unable to find the law stated at any place in the regulations. We wrote then to the War Department to know by what authority this commutation was paid, and the only answer we got was that it was a system that had grown up, and there was no law for it.

Mr. LONG. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Do I understand him, then, that the provisions which are embraced in these provisos are not already the law?

Mr. STEELE. The regulations are the law. So far as the commutation of rations is concerned that is a law. They are commuted at a certain rate. They had it placed at 75 cents, and the commutation for clothing is allowed.

Mr. LONG. If this is already law, why put in these provisos?

Mr. STEELE. To what does the gentleman refer?

Mr. LONG. I ask the gentleman from Indiana whether the language in these two provisos from line 43 to line 49 is already existing law?

Mr. STEELE. Heretofore the Department has construed it. They might allow more. This is intended to construe it and does not allow more to be provided.

Mr. LONG. Does this change the law or make a new law?

Mr. STEELE. I do not think it makes a new law.

Mr. LONG. Does it change existing law?

Mr. STEELE. No, sir.

Mr. LONG. Then what force has it?

Mr. STEELE. It corrects bad practices which have grown up under the law.

Mr. LONG. If it is a change of law it is obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. PRICE. I think I am the most unfortunate member of the House. I wanted to know what the Army Regulations provided, and I sent a note to the Secretary of War, requesting him to send me the last revision of the Army Regulations. He sent me a ponderous book, which I hold in my hand. Turning to page 22, I find article 17, section 145, reads as follows:

The whole number of general-service men of all grades and designations allowed as clerks for division, department, and district headquarters, and for superintendents of the recruiting service, is as follows:

Then follows an enumeration of them.

The following distribution of the general-service clerks above authorized is announced.

And then this article of the Army Regulations, article 17, section 145, gives their grades. And I find this:

Rating of commutation for quarters, $21 a month.
Rating of commutation for fuel, $9 a month.

And I not having been schooled at the feet of the gentleman who thinks he can make the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] understand while he can not make me do so—I can not understand why the Secretary of War should have sent me that book to mislead me and impress the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] with the idea that I am unable to understand the plainest terms of the English language.

This comes to us with all the force and significance of an Army regulation, and I must accept it as such notwithstanding the sneer of the gentleman that only the gentleman from Illinois could be taught to understand it.

Mr. BRAGG (crossing the floor and holding out a paper). If you will take the trouble to read it, I will show you the original order.

Mr. PRICE. I do not care about your original order. I have here the book sent me by the Secretary of War, and I would rather have it in this form than have it coming indorsed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. VIELE. Can this Secretary of War, or any other Secretary of War, prescribe laws for the government of Congress?

Mr. PRICE. No, sir; but we prescribe our own laws or rules, and they declare that there shall be no provision put on an appropriation bill which changes existing law. I have shown that this is existing law. The Supreme Court has so decided. All I ask you to do is to observe the law you have made for yourselves, and for my part I raise my voice against a violation of that law as contained in Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question of order. The gentleman from Wisconsin on the left [Mr. PRICE] makes the point of order that the clause which has been read by the Clerk changes existing law, and is therefore not in order in a general appropriation bill.

The Clerk will report the clause to which the point of order is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of such sum shall be paid for commutation of quarters at a greater rate to each man than $12 per month, and for commutation of fuel at a greater rate to each man than $6 per month: Provided further, That no such payment for extra-duty pay or for commutation shall be made without the men being regularly mustered therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be observed by carefully examining this clause that it does not change existing law even if the Army regulations referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin were a statutory provision. It simply provides that no part of the sum appropriated in this act shall be paid out for the purposes stated at a greater rate than is herein mentioned.

Mr. PRICE. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. The Chair is of the opinion that the clause in the rule to which reference has been made does not prohibit the House or the committee from limiting in any way that it may see fit any appropriation. It has been always regarded as a part of the province of Congress to direct and limit the appropriations that are made. The law, whatever it may be, remains the same, but Congress provides that this fund is to be applied in a particular way. For these reasons the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. From that decision of the Chair I desire to take an appeal.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Chair allow me to ask a question on that point? I want to see if I understand correctly the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I must insist that after a ruling has been made by the Chair the House shall either stand by it or overrule it without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask a question in good faith, to ascertain whether I understand the full scope of the ruling. I understand the Chair to rule that, although the law may fix or does fix a salary at a certain figure, yet that it is competent for this House, notwithstanding Rule XXI, which prohibits new legislation upon an appropriation bill, to limit the amount to one-half the salary fixed by law. For instance, if the salary is $3,000 a year, I understand the Chair to hold that it is competent to appropriate in full satisfaction of that salary for the coming year the sum of $1,500, and that that does not constitute any change of law.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the question here. It would, however, be competent to provide in the appropriation bill that not more than $1,500 a year should be paid out of the amount appropriated, although the salary as fixed by law might be $3,000. The law, whatever it was, would remain the same; but Congress in its wisdom would have seen fit to appropriate a less sum of money than the law fixed as the salary. If such action on the part of Congress did actually change the law, then the party affected would not have a status in the Court of Claims to recover the balance of his salary; but cases have arisen in the Court of Claims where persons have sued for a balance due them under the law and have recovered. There being no change of law, but simply an appropriation by Congress of such sum as it desires to appropriate for this particular purpose, the rule is not violated, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. CANNON. May I inquire further of the Chair, because it is important that the meaning of the ruling shall be fully understood——

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I must insist——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will indulge the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask whether the Chair has taken into consideration the enacting clause of this bill which provides that "the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1887?"

Then, following the enacting clause, comes the clause that we are considering. Now, although the law may fix the commutation at $21 a month, has the Chair considered whether, taking these two provisions of the bill together, they do not amount to a repeal of the law for the coming year, so that the party would have no status in the Court of Claims, the two clauses taken together operating as a repeal of the law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has considered that point. It is clearly competent for the House to appropriate any sum of money that it may see fit for the support of the Army, and the right of the House to do that ought not to be and can not be interfered with, as it would be by a decision suppressing as out of order a proposition for such a limitation of the appropriation. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. PRICE. Undoubtedly, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and the Chair stated that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PRICE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 25.

Mr. PRICE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, it was at the request of some of my friends that I demanded a quorum, and as they now release me I withdraw the call, not having any desire myself to consume time upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The call for a quorum is withdrawn; the ayes have it, and the decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out in line 41 all after the words "clerks and messengers" down to and including the forty-ninth line and inserting in lieu thereof "$105,500."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I had understood that that proviso was inserted as a means of retrenchment in this branch of the service, but I see now that the gentleman proposes to strike it all out.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; if it had stood as it was, the amount would be nearly one hundred and fifty thousand. This effects a saving of about $90,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gentleman proposes to strike out the proviso.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes; we propose to strike it out, to make this conform to the law which the House has passed, limiting the service and the pay.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then in fact this proviso is of no consequence.

Mr. BRAGG. Not now.

Mr. CANNON. Has the bill to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers become law?

Mr. BRAGG. It will be law in a few days.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may not become a law.

Mr. BRAGG. What if it is not law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope some further explanation will be made, for I do not exactly apprehend the views of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. The sum named in the bill is $29,160. Now this proposition largely increases the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. BRAGG. I will try to explain the matter so that the gentleman from Indiana and other members of the committee may understand it.

Under the present custom of the Department there are or may be employed one hundred and seventy-three clerks. By the previous paragraph of this bill we have limited the number of these clerks to one hundred and three. Under the present system appropriation has been made for sixty-six messengers, but in the previous paragraph of this bill we have limited the number of messengers to forty-five. Under existing arrangements those one hundred and seventy-three clerks receive pay ranging from $92 to about $104 a month, making a sum of money larger by $90,000 a year than the amount here appropriated.

The reason the provisos were put in before amending this section as proposed by the committee was this: We had no assurance that we would be able to pass through this House our bill regulating and establishing the general-service system of messengers and clerks. Therefore, in order to provide for those serving as general-service clerks, we in our bill limited the pay to such provisions as we saw would be authorized by existing law; that is, to the payment of $6 a month for fuel and $12 a month for rooms. We did this in analogy with the statute passed in connection with the Army bill, which fixes the commutation of the Lieutenant-General and the commanding generals and all other officers at $12 a room. By analogy with this payment of $12 a room authorized by law for the officers of the Army, we allowed this payment to a clerk employed on detached duty, and who would necessarily require a room in order to discharge properly his duties.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition as it now stands in the bill, with the omissions which have been made, reads, I believe, in this form:

For payment to enlisted men serving as general-service clerks and messengers, one hundred and thirty-five in all, $29,160.

Now, as I understand, the effect of the pending amendment is to increase the amount of the appropriation from $29,160 to the amount which the amendment names.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. How does that happen?

Mr. BRAGG. I have been trying to explain that; and if I have not done so, I can not.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the effect of the gentleman's amendment is to increase largely the appropriation, I desire to inquire further why should that be done?

Mr. BRAGG. I will try again to explain that.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the bill we pass should become a law and should have the same effect as the provision in the text of this bill, why does it become necessary to increase largely the appropriation?

Mr. BRAGG. It does seem to me that the jingle of coppers sometimes leads my distinguished friend astray, so that he loses that steady balance which at other times he is remarkable for possessing. The appropriation as it now stands in this bill is totally inadequate for the payment of these clerks; but it was the only appropriation we felt authorized to make until we had tried the sense of this House as to its willingness to organize a system of clerks and provide for their payment. Therefore in the bill reported the number of clerks was limited to one hundred and three, the number of messengers to forty-five, providing what their salaries should be, making the salary to be given them by law correspond to the salary which had been eked out for them in petit larcenies upon the different appropriations. The House sustained the bill which we reported for a general-service system of messengers and clerks, and the bill has gone to the Senate. Therefore, in placing in the hands of the Paymaster-General money to discharge the liabilities of the Government in case that bill should become a law, we now make the appropriation large enough to meet the demands of the service. This is in lieu of all the provisos to which there was objection.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Suppose that the bill to which the gentleman refers should not pass the Senate and become a law, what would be the effect of the provision in this bill?

Mr. BRAGG. The effect would be this: The money appropriated could only be paid at the rates specified.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would $105,500 be sufficient, if the bill which has gone to the Senate should not become a law?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir; but it would pay only one hundred and three clerks instead of one hundred and seventy-three, and forty-five messengers instead of sixty-six. In other words, we make provision by money to pay the number of men that we recognize ought to be employed.

Mr. HOLMAN. In any event it is manifest that in order to make this bill consistent with the bill which passed the other day the amount named here is too small, and ought to have been $105,500, instead of the amount as reported. I understand that to be the effect of the gentleman's statement.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BRAGG, it was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no enlisted man shall be employed or used as a valet or servant. Any one violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor less than $1,000 for each and every such offense.

Mr. BRAGG. I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. KING. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to withhold his point of order until I can be heard upon the amendment for a few minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. I will hold the point in reserve and yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, whether there are statutes or regulations controlling this feature in the military service I have not been able to satisfy myself, but it has come to my knowledge that the practice does exist of officers in the Army using enlisted men as servants or valets. If such practice does prevail, surely some law should be enacted to do away with it. It is discreditable. Nothing could degrade and demoralize the service more than to make servants, lackeys, of our enlisted men.

In the first place no, man worthy of wielding a sword or carrying a musket would accept such service. And when an enlisted man does go into such a position it must necessarily affect the morale of the command. It degrades the men, and they feel it. We have a phenomenal spectacle in our Army, small as it is, in its list of deserters.

The vast extent of desertion from the Army, amounting to nearly one-half of its force, is a question which should be investigated and some remedy applied to the evil. Why should so large a number of the American Army desert every year? They are better paid, better fed, and better clothed than the soldiers of any other army in the world.

This army is commanded almost exclusively by graduates of the Military Academy at West Point. Can it be possible that it is for want of judicious discipline that produces this disgraceful result? There is a great deal in the American soldier. He is more than a mere machine. He is a man, and is governed by the same instincts of higher manhood that controls the American citizen generally. He knows his rights and the natural dignity of his character, and when treated accordingly he will as a rule obey the law under which he serves; but when called upon to perform menial service his manhood rebels.

If officers want servants they should hire them as other men do, or Congress should provide them with servants.

I do not understand from reading history, however, that the great commanders of the world were reared in such luxury.

If, Mr. Chairman, there is no general law prohibiting this abuse, one should be enacted at the earliest date practicable and blot out this luxurious and demoralizing practice.

I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF THE STAFF CORPS.

Corps of Engineers.—For one brigadier-general, six colonels, twelve lieutenant-colonels, twenty-four majors, thirty captains (mounted), twenty-six first lieutenants (mounted), ten second lieutenants (mounted), and for additional pay to adjutant and quartermaster, in all $239,500.

Additional pay: For pay of officers in the Corps of Engineers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $66,864.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words in line 67, "pay of the staff corps," and insert "pay of Corps of Engineers."

My object in making that amendment is this: I wish to prevent the possibility even by implication of legislating so as to make the Corps of Engineers a part of the staff of the Army. The Corps of Engineers in our Army is a part of the line. In European armies from which we took our system the corps of engineers constitutes a part of the line of the army, and there as here, the engineer officers have the right to command troops.

On June 16, 1775, the Continental Congress resolved—

That there be one chief engineer and two assistants at the grand army.

On December 27, 1776, Congress resolved—

That there be sixteen battalions of infantry, three thousand light-horse, three regiments of artillery, and a corps of engineers.

On May 27, 1778, Congress resolved—

That in the engineering department three companies be established.

On the 11th of March, 1779, Congress resolved—

That the engineers in the service of the United States shall be formed into a corps and styled the "Corps of Engineers," and shall take rank and enjoy the same rights, honors, and privileges with the other troops in the Continental establishment.

That a commandant of the Corps of Engineers shall be appointed by Congress

In 1789 the Secretary of War, General Knox, recommended the organization of "a small corps of artillerists and engineers."

On May 9, 1794, in the Third Congress (see volume 1, page 366), we find an act organizing a corps of artillerists and engineers, to consist of fifty-three officers, thirty-two cadets, and nine hundred and ninety-two enlisted men. This organization was certainly a part of the line of the Army.

The act of March 3, 1795 (see volume 1, page 430), completed this corps.

The act of April 27, 1798, Fifth Congress, second session (see volume 1, page 552), provided for an additional regiment of artillerists and engineers.

The act of July 16, 1798 (see volume 1, page 604), and the act of March 3, 1799 (see volume 1, page 749), and the act of May 14, 1800, Sixth Congress (see volume 2, page 85), all legislate for the Corps of Engineers, but do not change its status as part of the line of the Army.

The act of March 16, 1802, Seventh Congress (volume 2, page 132), provides that in place of the two regiments of artillerists and engineers there shall be one regiment of artillerists and one Corps of Engineers, and that the Corps of Engineers shall be stationed at West Point.

Section 3 of the act of February 28, 1803, Seventh Congress (volume 2, page 206), provides that the commanding officer of the Corps of Engineers be authorized to enlist an artificer and enlisted men.

The act of April 29, 1812, Twelfth Congress (volume 2, page 729), directs that—

The artificers and privates in the Corps of Engineers shall be formed into a company, and be officered from the Corps of Engineers according as the commanding officer of that corps may direct.

Section 6 of this act repeals the law which "confines the selection of the commander of the Corps of Engineers to the said corps."

On June 23, 1812, the President instructed General Bloomfield to "assign officers of the Corps of Engineers to such duties in the line of the Army as may comport with their rank."

The act of March 2, 1821, Sixteenth Congress (volume 3, page 615), provides that the Corps of Engineers "shall be retained in the service as at present organized."

The act of May 15, 1846, Twenty-ninth Congress (volume 9, page 12), provides:

That there be added to the Corps of Engineers one company of sappers miners, and pontoniers, to be called engineer soldiers.

The act of August 3, 1861, Thirty-seventh Congress (volume 12, page 287), provides—

That there shall be added to the Corps of Engineers three companies of engineer soldiers, to be commanded by appropriate officers of said corps.

The act of August 6, 1861, Thirty-seventh Congress (volume 12, page 317), provides—

That there be added to the Corps of Topographical Engineers one company of soldiers, to be commanded by appropriate officers of said corps.

The act of March 3, 1863, Thirty-seventh Congress, third session (volume 12, page 743), merged the Corps of Topographical Engineers with the Corps of Engineers.

The act of July 28, 1866, Thirty-ninth Congress (volume 14, page 335, section 20), provided that—

Five companies of engineer soldiers shall constitute a battalion of engineers to be officered by officers of the Corps of Engineers.

I have now called attention to every law passed by the Continental Congress, or by Congress under the Constitution, which is pertinent to my argument. It will be observed that every law treats of the Corps of Engineers as constituting part of the line of the Army. It will also be observed that the seinor officer is invariably referred to as the commanding officer of the Corps of Engineers, which precludes the possibility of the corps being regarded as a staff organization.

As additional proof that the Corps of Engineers was not a part of the general staff of the Army, I call the attention of the committee to the act of March 3, 1813, Twelfth Congress, second session (volume 2, page 816), and the act of April 24, 1816, Fourteenth Congress (volume 3, page 297), one of the purposes of these acts being to designate the officers of which the general staff shall consist, and in neither of these acts is the Corps of Engineers included as a part of the staff.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having seen that every law enacted since the organization of our Government provided for a Corps of Engineers as a part of the line of the Army, I think it a bad precedent to class the Corps of Engineers in this bill as a part of the staff.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama if he is willing to say that engineers have always been rated as belonging to the line of the Army?

Mr. WHEELER. There have been efforts on several occasions to classify them as part of the staff organizations, or it would be more exact to say that efforts have been made to deprive engineer officers of the prerogatives of command which are enjoyed by officers of the line. This was the gravamen of the controversy which arose in 1803 between Colonel Williams, of the engineers, and Captain Izard, of the artillery. This conflict was practically settled by the enactment of the sixty-third article of war, which empowered the President to assign engineer officers to the command of troops. (See act April 10, 1806, Ninth Congress, volume 2, page 259.) It is also true that in the Army Register for 1879 the words "staff corps" were printed at the top of the pages which contained the Corps of Engineers. But this was regarded as unauthorized, and it has never been repeated.

While this may at first sight appear to be a matter of little moment yet if the members of this House will reflect the objection to the improper designation of corps will become clearly apparent.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, it is most astounding that certain men have fed upon such meat that, like Cæsar, they have grown too great to belong anywhere. There is somebody who has said, and I think a poet, that there is a certain class of people who are too good for heaven, too mean for hell, and nobody knew where they were going.

We have an Engineer Corps which has actually outgrown its pantaloons. It sets itself up as an independent institution. It does not belong to the staff of the Army, oh! no, because then it would be under the command of somebody. They have no command in the line of the Army; they do not serve in the line. Who are they?

These are the distinguished gentlemen who spend the millions on rivers and harbors under the direction of the Secretary of War. They are a part of his staff.

Mr. WHEELER. Do not you admit that there are five companies in the line of the Army?

Mr. BRAGG. Oh, yes; you have some men who are in training for sappers and miners, and things of that sort.

But, Mr. Chairman, it does not require any such thing as a statute to determine what a staff is. These gentlemen only claim now to be excused. Why, the Army is no longer a thing for them to be in; for if they go in the staff it implies that they are under somebody!

Let us see if they have any recognition in the statute. What do the military terms imply?

The staff of the Army may be properly designated under three heads—

And I read now from a standard military dictionary—

The general staff, consisting of the adjutant-general, assistant adjutants-general, aides-de-camp, inspector-general, and assistant inspectors-general.

Now, in framing this Army bill I classified them and put them under the general staff. There is no statute which defines what the general staff shall be, but that is exactly what the general staff means. Let us see what the authorities say:

Second, the staff corps: These are special corps or departments, whose duties are confined to distinct branches of the service.

Who are they?

The engineer corps, the topographical engineers, are such a staff corps. The ordnance, the quartermaster, the subsistence, the medical, and the pay departments are staff departments.

In drawing the bill I have considered first the general staff, so that the country may see exactly what they cost. Then I set apart the staff corps, so that the country could see exactly what the engineers cost; and then the staff departments, in order, as they come under the definition of staff as defined here by a standard military dictionary, a recognized authority everywhere, to see what each one of these different branches of the service costs; and it is nothing but miserable squeamishness upon the part of these people, who are afraid to be classed in this manner with the common herd. They do not want to go down with the ignobile vulgus; that would wound their sensitive pride. But when you go near one of these people it is, "procul, procul este, profani—I am an engineer!"

Mr. STORM was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. WHEELER. I am sorry indeed, Mr. Chairman, to differ with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, for whom I have the highest respect; but I think he makes a great error in saying that the Engineer Corps are afraid of being classed with the common herd. Certainly the gentleman does not regard the staff of the Army as "common."

The staff corps are held up as the very élite of the élite of the Army, and the engineers have no objection to be classed as members of the staff as far as that word goes.

But this bill and all laws ought to be so constructed as to work for the best interests of the service, and to place the Engineer Corps of the Army into the staff would have the effect to prevent these distinguished officers from having any command. Everybody in the House knows——

Mr. BRAGG. What command do they have now?

Mr. WHEELER. They have the right to command, and it ought to be so fixed as to secure to an officer of engineers the same chance as any other officer of the line of the Army to assume any command that might fall to him when on any duty to which he could or might be called.

Mr. BRAGG. And you propose to take them off the staff and put them in the line?

Mr. WHEELER. By all means; that is where they belong. There was no law ever made by the United States that places them in the staff until this bill proposed to put them there. The new rules prescribe that there shall be no legislation in appropriation bills, and this attempt to put them in the staff does put legislation upon an appropriation bill because it defines them as the staff when they actually belong to the line.

Now every member of this House knows that the Engineer Corps is composed of the most distinguished graduates of West Point.

Mr. LONG. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. Do you not claim that the engineers belong to the line now?

Mr. WHEELER. I do. They belong to the line under every law from 1776 down to the present day.

Mr. BRAGG. Where is their command? Is there a battalion of engineers at Willets Point?

Mr. WHEELER. Some are there and some are elsewhere. But during the war every gentleman knows there were regiments of engineers under the command of distinguished engineer officers. Lieutenants, captains, or majors were made colonels of volunteer regiments of engineers and put in command of these regiments of engineers and did line duty.

Mr. BRAGG. You may have had them where you were. We had not.

Mr. WHEELER. They had them in Thomas's army and Sherman's army, and in all the armies on both sides; and no proper army was ever organized in Europe or America without regiments of engineers commanded by regular engineer officers.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEELE. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the view of the gentleman from Alabama. But it is not settled law that they are in the line. I have investigated the matter lately in connection with the army bill which I have had in charge, and at the suggestion of the War Department and the Engineer Department have incorporated in the bill a provision that they should be in the line. The question has been decided differently by different Secretaries.

Mr. WHEELER. I think my friend is mistaken as to its having ever been formally and officially decided that the Corps of Engineers was part of the staff of the Army. In 1803 the Secretary of War decided that officers of engineers should not command any officer or troops of any other corps except by special orders of the President. The other corps referred to in this order were necessarily the artillery, cavalry, or infantry, and as it speaks of them as "other corps" it must be obvious that these corps and the Corps of Engineers were at that time regarded as corps of the line of the Army. The reason given for the order was that "the scientific pursuits of the Corps of Engineers do not allow time for attention to details, police, and discipline of the troops."

It is true that engineer officers are frequently detailed for staff duty, but this is equally true of the officers of the artillery, cavalry, and infantry, and no one has ever made an effort to maintain the proposition that such details affected in any way the status of the corps to which they belonged.

Besides all this every law ever enacted with regard to the Corps of Engineers has put them in the line, and not one law speaks of them as being in the staff.

Mr. BRAGG. Did you ever hear of a man being promoted in linear promotion to fill a vacancy as a captain, major, or colonel in the Engineer Corps?

Mr. WHEELER. In all regiments of engineers or corps of engineers they are promoted in regular order, the same as in other parts of the line.

Mr. VIELE. Did you ever hear of an engineer officer fighting Indians?

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir; because they have other duties to perform. But engineer officers were on duty as officers of regiments or battalions of engineers during the war in every campaign on both sides.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I simply want to repeat that this bill commences by implication to put the Corps of Engineers where they do not belong according to the statutes. That is not good legislation.

The distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, the chairman of our committee (and an admirable chairman he is, too), admits that there are now five companies of engineers commanded by engineer officers. If they are staff officers, what right have they to be commanding troops? And yet, ever since we have had an Army organization, officers of the Corps of Engineers have been commanding companies or battalions of engineer troops.

I hope the committee will sustain this amendment, because at any rate it can not do a particle of harm, and I assure the committee it will do good.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 67, strike out the words "staff corps."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state this is a mere headline for the provisions following. It is not transferred to the act which is published in the Statutes at Large, and will not appear as a part of the law. It is not transferred to the law as printed, and would be omitted by the enrolling clerks.

Mr. WHEELER. The object might be accomplished by transferring the words "pay of staff corps" from line 67 to below line 77. That is where it should come in.

Mr. BRAGG. I think not. We can not do that.

Mr. WHEELER. I insist on my original amendment, which will attain the object which I have in view.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the gentleman's amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BRAGG. I hope the committee will not rise yet, but will make some further progress with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 33.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday at 11 o'clock a. m.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of delegates of District Assembly No. 66, Knights of Labor, of the District of Columbia, for the passage of the bill (H. R. 4308) to regulate steam engineering in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BOUND: Petition of John J. Nissley and many others, of Hummelstown, Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, for the passage of a law to redeem the trade-dollar—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. CAINE: Petition of 4,454 citizens of various parts of Utah Territory, and of 3,110 citizens of Weber County, Utah Territory, earnestly protesting against the enactment of any legislation which will deprive them of all voice in the government of that Territory, by disfranchising them, through test-oaths, on account of their religious belief, as proposed by the minority party of said Territory; also against the passage of any law which would abolish the Legislature of Utah and create for the government of the Territory a legislative commission—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. COMPTON: Petition of Hester Ann Ridout, administratrix of Hester Ann and Matilda Chase, Anne Arundel County, Maryland; of A. T. Sneuffler, of Frederick County, and of Philip Shearer, for payment of supplies and stores taken and used by the Army of the United States during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FINDLAY: Memorial of Drovers and Mechanics' National Bank, and others, of Baltimore, in favor of the redemption of the trade-dollar—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. JACKSON: Petition of Elizabeth Denges, for a widow's pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LYMAN: Petition of 35 ladies of Red Oak, Iowa, in favor of the passage of the temperance educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. SOWDEN: Petition of J. B. Roeder, J. E. Balliet, W. H. Ainey, C. M. W. Keck, Jas. P. Barnes, Wm. Reimer, Martin Kemever, W. R. Steckel, M. J. Kramer, F. M. Kramer, Jas. B. Smith, A. G. Renninger & Co., Wm. R. Lawfer & Co., Bittner, Hansicken & Co., Jacob L. Fan & Co., Hartzer Bros., Koch Bros., Keller & Brother, M. L. Young & Co., Brobet, Diehl & Co., H. M. Leh & Co., Trexler & Hartzell, W. H. Taylor & Co., B. F. Heinbach & Co., Zellner Bros., H. Leh & Co., and several others, of Allentown, Pa., praying Congress to pass a law redeeming the trade-dollar—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Resolution of the Legislature of Ohio, in favor of granting pensions to prisoners of war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THROCKMORTON: Petition of colored citizens of Denison, Tex., praying Congress to make a per capita appropriation of $100 to transport them to Liberia—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. TOOLE: Petition of Assembly No. 4482 of Knights of Labor, of Gloster, Mont., protesting against passage of the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. WEBER: Petition to amend the Constitution—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WEST: Petition of D. D. Cassiday and others, of Amsterdam, N. Y., praying for the redemption of the trade-dollar—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. MILO WHITE: Letter of Governor Hubbard, of Minnesota, relating to pension of Mrs. P. L. Dartt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The following petitions, praying Congress for the enactment of a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools of the District of Columbia, in the Territories, and in the Military and Naval Academies, the Indian and colored schools supported wholly or in part by money from the national Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. BINGHAM: Of Rev. H. C. McCook and 91 others, citizens of Philadelphia, Pa.

By Mr. TOOLE: Of citizens of Deer Lodge County, Montana Territory.

By Mr. WINANS: Of citizens of Genesee County, Michigan.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 10, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of April 16, 1886, a report of Lieut. Henry T. Allen of his explorations of Copper, Tanand, and Koyukuk Rivers, in Alaska, in the year 1885, with accompanying maps, photographs, and drawings explanatory thereof; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As this communication is accompanied by a number of documents, it will be referred, together with the papers, to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in reference to a resolution of February 16, 1886, a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to the employment of special agents for the detection of fraud in the entries of public lands; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, in favor of the passage of the bill (S. 779) for pensioning prisoners of war who were confined in the confederate military prisons during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring the passage of the bill to create a court of customs and to prevent undervaluation; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of 88 dairymen and butter-makers of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill placing the manufacture and sale or all imitations of butter under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and taxing them at 10 cents a pound; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Tippecanoe Club of Marion County, Indiana, praying that a monument be erected over the remains of General William Henry Harrison at North Bend, Ind.; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. GEORGE presented the petition of Dr. H. Sanche, of Port Gibson, Miss., praying governmental aid in his researches into the prevention and cure of yellow fever; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a petition of 426 citizens of Oil City, Pa., in which they set forth that they labor under great inconvenience for want of a suitable public building for the United States post-office, internal-revenue and other offices connected with Government business, and praying an appropriation of $50,000 for the erection of a building proper for such purposes. The petitioners further state that the large commercial and manufacturing interests located there demand a commodious and convenient building. This petition is signed by the mayor, postmaster, treasurer, president of the board of trade, and by most of the prominent and leading business firms of Oil City. I trust that this petition will receive the careful and favorable consideration of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom I move its reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented petitions of Granges No. 533, No. 625, No. 210, No. 792, No. 508, No. 141, No. 135, and No. 204, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania, praying for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented memorials of Granges No. 135, No. 792, No. 508, No. 141, No. 210, No. 533, No. 204, and No. 625, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the admission free of duty of all agricultural raw materials; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of a bill legalizing contracts between commercial associations and carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Patrons of Husbandry of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the admission free of duty of all agricultural raw materials; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented two petitions of Patrons of Husbandry of Pennsylvania, praying for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 556 citizens of Bloomsburg, Columbia County, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a bill embodying the recommendations of the national pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of J. B. Henderson and other citizens of Brookville, Pa., and a petition of citizens of Orwigsburg and Pottsville, Pa., praying for the passage of a bill providing for the redemption of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON. I also present a petition signed by 213 citizens of Pottsville, Pa., praying for the passage of a law providing for the redemption of the trade-dollar. I call the attention of the Committee on Finance to this subject, as a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania] in the early part of the session has been before that committee for four months. Numerous citizens of my State are interested in the passage of the bill, and I should be glad if the committee would give the subject early consideration.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I also present numerous petitions sent to my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL], who is necessarily absent on account of sickness. I present the petitions of many Granges of Patrons of Husbandry in Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill to suppress the manufacture and sale of imitation butter. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I also present on behalf of my colleague sundry memorials of Granges of Patrons of Husbandry, remonstrating against legislation to admit wool, tobacco, &c., free of duty. I move the reference of the memorials to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I also present on behalf of my colleague a petition of the Association of Ex-Prisoners of War of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of what is known as the Logan war-prisoner's pension bill. I move its reference to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. On behalf of my colleague I also present a petition of the board of directors of the First National Bank of Conshohocken, Pa., praying for the passage of a law providing for the retirement of the trade-dollar. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I also present on behalf of my colleague a petition of the Society of Friends of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for legislation to provide exemplary punishment for seduction. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I also present on behalf of my colleague a memorial of Knights of Labor, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I present the petition of A. B. Osborne and others, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the redemption of the trade-dollar. I notice among the names appended to the petition those of the governor of the State of Connecticut and sundry other very influential citizens. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I present the petition of J. S. Hackett, J. E. Kiddall, L. M. Backus, and various other citizens of North Tunbridge, Vt., praying that the manufacture of imitation butter be prohibited, and that it shall not be sold under any other name, if at all, than its true name. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER presented resolutions adopted by the E. B. Wolcott Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Milwaukee, Wis., in favor of increasing pensions of soldiers and their widows and children; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Margaret Lynch, of Clark County, Wisconsin, mother of Lewis Lynch, late a private in Company I, Fourteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Frank E. Swenson and other citizens of McLean County, Dakota Territory, praying for legislation in regard to the exemption from taxation of the lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of Arabella Coddington, who served in the hospital service during the late war, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Iowa, praying that Mrs. Eliza Ferguson, widow of Hance Ferguson, late a private in the Thirty-third Iowa Volunteer Infantry, may be restored to the pension-rolls; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of Professor J. C. Arthur and 4 others, a committee appointed by the American Association for the Advancement of Science, praying that an appropriation be made for investigating the nature of the diseases of fruits, fruit trees, grains, and plants; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ann Arbor and Nashville, in the State of Michigan, praying for legislation appropriate for the protection of young girls in the District of Columbia and other localities within the jurisdiction of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PALMER. I also present the memorial of John R. Hinton and 15 other citizens of McLean County, Dakota, setting forth the inability of that county to meet its necessary expenditures by reason of the exemption of railroad lands within its limits from taxation, and praying for relief. I do not know to what committee the memorial should be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To the Committee on Territories, the Chair suggests.

Mr. PALMER. I ask for the printing of the memorial in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. I think a bill upon that subject has already been reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was going to make that suggestion, and that the memorial lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER. As a bill on the subject has been reported, I have no objection to the memorial lying on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been reported, the memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented the petitions of William L. Prince and others, of Cumberland, Me., and the petition of J. S. Barstow and others, of North Yarmouth, Me., praying for a revenue tax on adulterated butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DOLPH presented four petitions of freeholders of Whitman County, Washington Territory, and Nez Percé County, Idaho Territory, praying for the opening of the De Smet Mission Withhold and the allotment of lands to the Indians in severalty; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present a petition somewhat numerously signed by citizens of Arizona, praying that the House bill recently passed granting pensions to survivors of the Mexican war be defeated in the Senate because it does not give them enough. I do not concur in the prayer, but I present the petition, and move its reference to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented memorials of the Knights of Labor of South Bend and Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the employment of convict labor on public works; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Logansport, Ind., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of August Sowers, of Denver, Colo., praying for the passage of a bill granting him an amended discharge; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, praying that the county of Columbia, in Washington Territory, be authorized to issue bonds for the construction of a courthouse; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. GEORGE presented the memorial of Louis Levy, of Brookhaven, Lincoln County, Mississippi, praying relief against a judgment rendered by the special court on the Alabama claims dismissing his claim for indemnity, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of J. K. Mitchell, of Richmond, Va., praying for the removal of his disability under the fourteenth amendment; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGALLS presented four petitions of citizens of Crawford and Cherokee Counties, Kansas, praying for the creation of another judicial district in that State; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROWN. I present the petition of a very considerable number of colored citizens of Whitfield County, Georgia, who state that they are descendants of a people torn from Africa and brought to this country, where for two hundred years their children have contributed by their labor to increase the wealth of every portion of the United States. They greatly desire to go to the land of their forefathers and make it their home, but they have not the means of paying their passage and providing for their immediate wants on their arrival in Liberia. They therefore ask for the appropriation by Congress of not exceeding $100 per capita, to be expended under the direction of the American Colonization Society in paying the expenses of emigrants to Liberia and providing six months' shelter and support for themselves and their children on their arrival there.

I suppose the petition had better be referred to the Committee on Finance, as it involves a large expenditure of money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Similar petitions have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BROWN. Then there is no objection to that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of George W. Stevenson, late a private in Company H, Seventy-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John Cox, late a private in Company H, Twentieth Illinois Infantry, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Sergeant Ryon Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Brashear, Mo., praying for the passage of pension laws as recommended by the national pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Chicago and Coultersville, in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of colored citizens of the United States, praying that Congress appropriate money to transport them to Liberia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GIBSON presented a petition of the mayor and councilmen of Baton Rouge, La., praying for the reopening of the old Natchez road, which runs through the garrison grounds at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 428) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 28) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 570) for the relief of E. P. Thompson; and

A bill (H. R. 4115) for the relief of John Taggart.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 933) for the relief of M. C. Mordecai, to report it back to the Senate. On examination of the case the committee are satisfied that it properly belongs to the Committee on Claims. I therefore move that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 461) to change the time of holding United States circuit and district courts in the southern district of the State of Florida, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5221) to change the time of holding United States circuit and district courts in the southern district of the State of Florida, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5910) to detach the counties of Howard, Little River, and Sevier from the western and add them to the eastern district of Arkansas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7329) granting a pension to Patrick McKean;

A bill (S. 2258) to increase the pension of James E. Gott;

A bill (H. R. 5643) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Ward;

A bill (H. R. 4644) granting a pension to Noah B. Brookshire; and

A bill (H. R. 3954) granting a pension to Henrietta Fisher.

A bill (H. R. 8325) for the relief of John Mingus.

The above thirty-five pension bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2374) granting a pension to Mrs. Arabella Coddington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2375) to restore Mrs. Eliza Ferguson to the pension-roll; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2376) granting a pension to Mary E. Hedrick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT. At the request of my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY], who is unable to be in the Senate to-day, I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 2377) to authorize the United States district court for the northern district of California to proceed in the case of the executors and heirs of Augustine de Yturbide, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 2378) to regulate the effect of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States in the several States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2379) for the relief of Mary A. Doud; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2380) for a public building at West Chester, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2381) granting a pension to Daniel Shock; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2385) granting a pension to John McCarty; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2386) granting a pension to Mary P. Jarvis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAWYER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2387) to incorporate the Washington and Tennallytown Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2388) granting a pension to Alonzo Raymond; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2389) granting a pension to Samuel H. Pierce; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2390) granting a pension to J. B. Farmer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2391) granting a pension to John G. Warren; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, in the progress of the debate on the fishery resolution the other day it was stated that there was a law which already gave the President of the United States full authority to issue proclamation closing ports of the United States under certain circumstances. I have examined that law and all other laws which I can find touching that subject, and I am not satisfied. I believe that those laws were intended to apply to discriminating duties, to tonnage and port charges, and not to the existing condition of things as between this country and Canada.

A law authorizing the President to issue proclamation should be clear and unmistakable in its terms, so that in addition to the responsibility of issuing the proclamation he should not have the responsibility of undertaking to determine the meaning of a law. Therefore I believe it to be necessary; and I introduce the bill which I send to the Chair, and ask its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 2392) to limit the commercial privileges of vessels of foreign countries in the ports of the United States to such purposes as are accorded to American vessels in the ports of such foreign countries, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever any foreign country whose vessels have been placed on the same footing in the ports of the United States as American vessels (the coastwise trade excepted), shall deny to any vessels of the United States any of the commercial privileges accorded to national vessels in the harbors, ports, or waters of such foreign country, it shall be the duty of the President, on receiving satisfactory information of the continuance of such discrimination against any vessels of the United States, to issue his proclamation excluding, on and after such time as he may indicate, from the exercise of such commercial privileges in the ports of the United States as are denied to American vessels in the ports of such foreign countries, all vessels of such foreign country of a similar character to the vessels of the United States thus discriminated against, and suspending the concessions previously granted to the vessels of such country. And on and after the date named in such proclamation for it to take effect, if the master, officer, or agent of any vessel of such foreign country excluded by said proclamation from the exercise of any commercial privileges, shall do any act prohibited by said proclamation, in the ports, harbors, or waters of the United States for or on account of such vessel, such vessel and its rigging, tackle, furniture, and boats, and all the goods on board shall be liable to seizure and to forfeiture to the United States, and any person opposing any officer of the United States in the enforcement of this act or aiding or abetting any other person in such opposition, shall forfeit $800 and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine one question about the bill, whether it is to enlarge and increase the powers of the President of the United States or to restrict those he now has over this same subject.

Mr. FRYE. I said when I presented the bill that I had examined the law to which reference was made in the discussion of the fishery resolution, and in my judgment it does not authorize the President to issue proclamation under existing circumstances, but it was a law intended to authorize him to issue proclamation touching discriminating duties, discriminations in tonnage and port charges, having no reference whatever to privileges of this kind; and I wanted to give him full authority, when he received what he regarded as sufficient information, to close our ports against any foreign nation which discriminated against us. That is the only purpose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2393) granting a pension to Anna M. Marshall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2394) for the relief of John McGuire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VAN WYCK. A few weeks since I introduced a bill, and had it referred to the Judiciary Committee, authorizing the Union Pacific Railroad Company under certain conditions and limitations to use the money in the Treasury placed there by the Thurman act for the purpose of constructing branch roads. Since that time the people of Nebraska and other States and Territories have given the matter consideration; and the people of Nebraska particularly have desired that another bill should be introduced, a bill authorizing the Union Pacific Railroad to use the credit of that company instead of the money now in the Treasury for the same purpose, the building of branch roads, the company feeling that the law of 1873 stands in the way of using their credit for any such purpose.

It is a matter of congratulation that although from 1873 until a recent period there has not been a management of the Union Pacific Railroad which recognized a single provision of that law, there is now a management which we understand do recognize the force of the law, and they unite in asking Congress that they may be allowed that credit for this purpose.

Although the bill does not contain all I desire, still it is such as a portion of the people of Nebraska wish to have enacted; and as their representative and by their request I present it. It has at least one feature which those who are hoping for honest railroad building at some time in this country indorse, which is that under no circumstances, under no conditions, shall the branch lines which are hereby authorized to be built be stocked or bonded for an amount beyond the actual cash cost of the road so built.

For the reasons above stated I therefore introduce the bill at this time and ask that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee, to whom was referred the bill first introduced, desiring that committee to give it early consideration, because the people of Nebraska believe, and I think the people of the Northwest generally believe, that this bill is far more important to the interest of the people than the funding bill postponing the debt due from the Union Pacific Railroad to the Government seventy years, which has already been reported from that committee.

The bill (S. 2395) to authorize and empower the Union Pacific Railroad to construct branch roads was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 2396) for the relief of Louis Charles Perret; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted six amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, it was Ordered, That Mrs. E. A. Benham, widow of General H. W. Benham, have leave to withdraw the papers in her case from the files of the Senate.

THE DAVID J. ADAMS.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, any information in the possession of the Government concerning the alleged seizure of the United States fishing vessel David J. Adams, while engaged in lawful commerce in one of the ports in the Dominion of Canada, and what measures, if any, have been taken to protect fishing vessels of the United States while engaged in lawful commerce in the ports of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire whether the United States fishing vessel David J. Adams has been seized while engaged in lawful commerce in a port of the Dominion of Canada, and what measures, if any, are necessary to protect the persons and property of American citizens while engaged in lawful commerce in the ports of the Dominion of Canada; and to report by bill or otherwise.

INDIAN TRADERS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether any applications for the renewal of licenses of Indian traders have been refused by him, or by any officer of the Interior Department, and, if so, the names of all traders whose licenses have not been renewed on application, with the agency at which each of the same was located; also to state whether any charges were presented against such traders, or any of them, and if not, upon what ground, and by what authority of law, the renewal of such licenses, or any of them, was denied.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolutions; which were read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed, when the river and harbor appropriation bill shall be reported, to report as to each public work for which an appropriation is made in said bill, the facts which render such appropriation advisable and of national importance, and the condition of the work, if begun.

Resolved, That there be an additional clerk for the Committee on Commerce for the remainder of the session.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Committee on Pensions be requested to report back to the Senate the bill (S. 35) for the repeal of the limitation on arrears of pensions.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH BRIDESBURG ARSENAL GROUNDS.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask that Senate bill 1105, which has just been returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, be laid before the Senate for action upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1105) granting the right of way to the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company through the arsenal grounds at Bridesburg, Philadelphia, Pa.

The amendment of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of the House of Representatives, which was, at the end of line 19, to add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That before this act shall take effect the Secretary of War shall cause to be assessed the damages which may accrue to the United States, if any, by the grant of this right of way, by three officers of the Army, and the amount of the award paid into the Treasury.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

ADJUSTMENT OF POSTMASTERS' SALARIES.

Mr. INGALLS. I offer for adoption the resolutions which I send to the Chair.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to report to the Senate all the applications of postmasters and late postmasters for readjustment of salary under the act of March 3, 1883, from the State of Kansas, which have been passed upon, with a statement exhibiting the amount of pay each postmaster would have received if paid upon the basis of commissions under the act of 1854; and the amount of salary allowed and paid under the act of July 1, 1864; and the amount of salary allowed under the act of March 3, 1883; and the period of service for which such allowance was made; such statement to exhibit by comparison the amount of salary allowed under the act of 1864 and the amount of commissions under the act of 1854 in all the cases in which an allowance has been refused under the act of March 3, 1883.

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the syllabus of the opinion of the Attorney-General construing the act of March 3, 1883, as prepared and published by Postmaster-General Gresham on the 16th of February, 1884.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolutions.

Mr. CONGER. Does the first resolution confine the inquiry to the State of Kansas?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the words "the State of Kansas."

Mr. INGALLS. So as to make the request general?

Mr. CONGER. So as to make the request general.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. HOAR. Let the resolutions be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. INGALLS. Read the resolutions again, and then report the amendment afterwards.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out the words "from the State of Kansas," so as to read:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to report to the Senate all the applications of postmasters and late postmasters for readjustment of salary under the act of March 3, 1883, which have been passed upon, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. After the word "Kansas" I move to add the words "and the State of Virginia, and to designate how many married women are called postmasters."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words "from the State of Kansas" have been stricken out of the resolution, and it is now made general.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. My amendment would properly come in after the word "Kansas."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "Kansas" has been stricken out.

Mr. CONGER. The word "Kansas" has been stricken out, and it applies to Virginia and all the States.

Mr. INGALLS. It will include, as now amended, the State of Virginia, as well as all the other States.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. My object is to ascertain how many of the female postmasters are married women.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator not be good enough to call for that information in a separate resolution, and not burden this resolution, which has for its object a specific inquiry, with that request of his, which undoubtedly would be very interesting and valuable?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If this were a specific inquiry I would readily consent; but I should like to get it all in the same resolution, if I can do that. If the Senator from Kansas objects to getting too much information under his resolutions, I shall withdraw my amendment.

I propounded my inquiry for one reason, and that is, that under all the administrations preceding this one they would not allow a married woman to give bond as a postmaster, but under this administration I find that it is being done indiscriminately. I wanted to get that information under this resolution, but I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolutions be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions as amended.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if he has considered the amount of labor which will devolve upon the Post-Office Department in making up this statement. It seems to me from the character and extent of the resolutions it would require every clerk in the Post-Office Department for at least six months to get up the amount of information required, because as I understand the first resolution it now applies to all postmasters all over the country everywhere.

Mr. INGALLS. It applies to all postmasters who would be entitled to a readjustment of their salaries under the law of 1883—only those whose salaries have been readjusted. It is not a matter of computation, but merely of statement. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that the question is not whether the amount of labor which would be required is great, but whether the information is important and material.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I simply rose for the purpose of inquiring whether this information was important and necessary.

Mr. INGALLS. Exceedingly so, because the complaint is universal that the requirement of the law of 1883 requiring the readjustment of postmasters' salaries has been disregarded, and that there has been an effort on the part of the officers in charge of that Department to avoid the payment of what can justly be claimed under the operation of the law of 1883.

It is important that the Senate should be in possession of the information for two reasons: in the first place, to ascertain whether the complaint is well founded; and, in the second place, whether the amount is so large as to require special legislation by Congress hereafter.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have no objection at all to any investigation which may be necessary, and I will accord all needed information to the Senator from Kansas or any other Senator; but it seems to me that the resolutions ought to be preceded by a bill authorizing the Post-Office Department to employ just as many clerks as they may need to perform this service; and I do not know where it would end.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to say one word before these resolutions are adopted.

The information seems to be sought upon the theory that the postmasters whose accounts have been adjusted have not received as much as they ought to have received; but there are a large number of postmasters who have not received anything, and I should like to know—although I do not care to amend the resolutions or to embarass them—about how many years it is going to take to settle and adjust the accounts of the postmasters who are entitled to something under the law of 1883. That law was passed three years ago and more, and postmasters in Connecticut happened to be in the unfortunate position that Connecticut comes pretty early in the alphabetical list of States, so that a few postmasters who got in very early had their accounts adjusted, while the great bulk of postmasters who were entitled to an adjustment of their accounts have to wait until the Department go very slowly and leisurely down through the alphabetical list of States and get around to Connecticut again. I have a little curiosity to know how long that performance is likely to take. Under the speed with which the Post-Office Department are adjusting these accounts, I suspect that the postmasters in Connecticut who had a law passed for their benefit in 1883 will very many, if not all, of them be dead before their accounts are adjusted, and their heirs will receive the benefit.

The resolutions were agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 7364) authorizing the Secretary of War to allow the interment in the national cemetery at New Berne, in the State of North Carolina, of the remains of the late Mrs. Harriet B. Lehman—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 8329) to relieve Lewis F. Casey, of Illinois, of disabilities under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 3318) for the relief of Enols Loyd—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I give notice that to-morrow, after the morning business has been concluded, I shall move to consider Order of Business 313, being the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, which has been partially considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A special order has been made unanimously during the morning hour for to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. In that connection I desire to say that I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that our Calendar is composed largely of a very large number of bills of all kinds that Senators desire to have considered in the morning hour under the eighth rule and the ninth rule, and that I shall object to any of that time being occupied by special orders, and shall call the consideration of the Senate to it after the interstate-commerce bill is disposed of. There are bills on the Calendar which ought to receive the consideration of the Senate immediately or else be indefinitely postponed. Every morning until 2 o'clock I shall feel called upon to object to the consideration of bills which are not on the Calendar for the morning hour regularly either by motion or by request.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate is out of order.

Mr. CONGER. I want to get through with the Calendar.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The bill which I gave notice of is a bill which has been partially considered, and therefore I have sought to have a time fixed when it could be disposed of by the Senate, and there seemed to be unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. Until 2 o'clock I shall object to any such bill until the Calendar is disposed of.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I shall ask at the first opportunity that the bill be taken up.

EMELINE J. BABSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1065) granting a pension to Emeline J. Babson; which was in line 8, after the words "from and after the," to strike out "date of his death" and insert "passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Emeline J. Babson, widow of Erastus W. Babson, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the rules and regulations of the Department, the same to begin from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was concurred in.

REBECCA E. HASKIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2187) for the relief of Rebecca E. Haskins; which were in lines 2 and 3 to change the name "Haskins" to "Haskin," and also to amend the title in the same way.

The amendments were concurred in.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT LEWES, DEL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order will now be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe the Senate adjourned on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. That is the amendment before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], which will be stated.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. I understand from the Senator from Delaware that he represents a bill which is very important and yet about which there is no controversy whatever; and I can not decline to yield for the purpose of enabling him to take up the bill if there be no discussion beyond an explanation on his part.

Mr. GRAY. There will be nothing further than that. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Order of Business 1103, being the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del.

This bill has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce and concerns very much the interstate and foreign commerce of the country. The regulations of the Treasury Department do not enable proper facilities to be offered to that commerce at that point, and hence this measure is very important.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a railway to Lewes?

Mr. GRAY. There is a railway to Lewes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From where?

Mr. GRAY. All the way from Philadelphia.

I will say in explanation of the exigency out of which the bill arises that the port of Lewes is just inside of Cape Henlopen and opposite the breakwater, which is largely used as a port of call for the commerce of the country, in which there are from two hundred to three hundred sail of vessels nearly all the time. It is within the collection district of Delaware.

By a provision of law, which for a long time was disused, any vessel coming within a collection district which remains more than forty-eight hours is required to enter and clear at the custom-house of the district, which in this case would compel all these vessels that come into the Delaware breakwater to wait for orders to go up the Delaware to the port of Wilmington, 70 miles, to enter at the custom-house there and afterward to clear, which would be a very great embarrassment and restriction on the commerce of the country.

This bill merely provides that the deputy collector resident now at the town of Lewes may have the authority to enter and clear these vessels coming in there to wait for orders, without requiring them in case they remain forty-eight hours to go up the bay 70 miles to get an entry and clearance.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire if there is a communication from the Treasury Department on the subject.

Mr. GRAY. There is a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] who reported the bill has in his hand.

Mr. GORMAN. I have a letter——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there an appraiser or a surveyor at that place?

Mr. GRAY. No, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did not the President veto an Omaha port of delivery bill on the ground that there was no machinery, for lack of an appraiser or surveyor or both?

Mr. GRAY. But I will say in explanation of the exigency which calls for this bill that the commercial interests of Philadelphia have been represented in Washington asking that something of this kind be done to relieve the embarrassment which has been occasioned by the enforcement of the provision of law which was for a long time disused but which has been recently enforced by a regulation of the Treasury Department resurrected by some officer of the Treasury Department. It has created some embarrassment to the commerce of the country which uses that port of call at the Delaware breakwater. This is merely to relieve the captains from the inconvenience and trouble of taking their vessels or going themselves 70 miles up the Delaware Bay in order to enter and clear at Wilmington, when they can do the same thing under the supervision of the deputy collector already stationed at the breakwater.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But do I understand the Senator to mean that vessels which enter the Delaware breakwater in stress of weather and are only waiting for good weather to go out, are bound to enter?

Mr. GRAY. If they remain as long as forty-eight hours.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That there is no exception in the statute on its proper construction?

Mr. GRAY. No, sir, not as construed by the Treasury Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then if this is made a port of delivery they have got to enter.

Mr. GRAY. After forty-eight hours.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; and having entered, have they not got to unload?

Mr. GRAY. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Unless they enter in bond?

Mr. GRAY. I think not. I am quite sure not. I am not very familiar with all the regulations of the Treasury Department, and would rather that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] should explain that point; but I understand that after forty-eight hours, having made the entry and given a copy of their invoice or bills of lading, whatever the process is by which the officer takes supervision, they may remain, and when they are ready to leave and go to some other port on the coast or wherever their destination may be, they may clear through the deputy collector at Lewes, and do precisely what they would have to do if they went all the way to the port of Wilmington, where they would have to hand in their bills of lading and obtain a clearance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But a port of delivery is a port at which it is lawful to land goods, make regular entries at the custom-house, pay duties, or give a bond for transmission to some other port of delivery.

Mr. GRAY. It is not necessary that there should be any unloading of the cargo.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be; but I am on the point of inquiring how it is necessary that Lewes should be made a port of delivery, when the only object is that a vessel that goes in there in stress of weather and lies by till the weather is better and stays more than forty-eight hours must report at the custom-house with a copy of her manifest and then get authority to go on? Why do we make it a port of delivery for that purpose?

Mr. GRAY. Well, I can not answer the Senator from Vermont, because I am not familiar enough with the Treasury regulations or the laws pertaining to that subject; but I do know that there is a law which requires a vessel coming within a collection district anywhere and staying forty-eight hours——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will not press the further consideration of the bill now.

Mr. GRAY. I think if the Senator from Vermont will allow the Senator from Maryland, who reported the bill from the Committee on Commerce, to explain the view of the Committee on Commerce, he may be satisfied.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is one other thing I think we ought to pay attention to, and that is the message of the President of the United States on another bill for Omaha, which is just like this bill, as I remember, making that a port of delivery. That bill has come back with the objections of the President, which we have not passed upon, declaring that in order to do that thing, if it be necessary, additional expense must be gone to in setting up the full machinery of a custom-house. That is the veto message, if I remember it correctly. Now, before we act upon this other bill, which appears to be the same thing, it would seem that we had better consider whether these objections of the President that have been sent to us officially are well-founded or not.

Mr. CULLOM. I must object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois interposes an objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. GORMAN. I only ask unanimous consent that the letter in regard to the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, that order will be made.

The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 5, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, from the clerk of your committee, of the letter dated the 4th instant, inclosing bill S. 2256, "to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del." The bill provides that Lewes shall be a port of delivery within the collection district of Delaware, and that the deputy collector of customs stationed there shall have the power to enter and clear all vessels coming to that port.

The harbor at Lewes is a rendezvous for vessels from foreign countries, and such vessels, within a limited time after their arrival in the United States, are required to make entry at the custom-house. At present they must be entered at the office of the collector of customs at Wilmington, some distance from Lewes, and this requirement occasions considerable inconvenience and loss of time on the part of masters and consignees.

A deputy collector being already stationed at Lewes it is not apprehended that any material additional expense to the Government would be caused by the provisions of the bill. In view of these facts its passage or the passage of some similar measure is hereby recommended.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

Hon. S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, U. S. Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott, and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1471) to remove the charge of desertion from the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the Army against certain soldiers;

A bill (S. 216) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certificates of discharge to certain members of the Missouri Home Guards; and

A bill (S. 223) to regulate the promotion of graduates of the United States Military Academy.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. EDMUNDS to strike out section 13 of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

Whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate, or refuse, or neglect to obey any lawful order or requirement of the commission in this act named, it shall be the duty of the commission, and lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to apply in a summary way by petition to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district in which the common carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be. And the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable. And such notice may be served on such common carrier, his or its officers, agents, or servants, in such manner as the court shall direct. And said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily as a court of equity, and without the formal pleadings and proceedings applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power, if it think fit, to direct and prosecute, in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition. And if it be made to appear to such court on such hearing, or on report of any such person or persons, that the lawful order or requirement of said commission drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or interdict to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or disobedience of such order or requirement of said commission and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or interdict, it shall be lawful for such court to issue writs of attachment on any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or interdict against such common carrier, and if a corporation, against one or more of the directors, officers, or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver, or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or interdict. And said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such common carrier or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or interdict, to pay such sum of money not exceeding for each carrier or person in default the sum of $500 for every day after a day to be named in the order that such carrier or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or interdict; and such moneys shall be payable, as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining or into court to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or into the Treasury; and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court. When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000, or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States under the same regulations now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal, but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution or any writ or process thereon. And such court may in every such matter order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable. Whenever any such petition shall be filed or presented by the commission, it shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, to prosecute the same, and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expense of the courts of the United States. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session.

Mr. CULLOM. If I can get the attention of the Senator from Vermont I should like to ask him to modify the amendment which is now before the Senate for consideration.

Section 11 of the bill as it is before the Senate provides for an investigation by the commission of all complaints that are made against transportation companies or common carriers coming under the provisions of this act. Section 12 provides the mode of action on the part of the commission preparatory to the case getting into court if it has to go there. Then section 13 is proposed to be stricken out and the Senator's amendment to take its place. That amendment is substantially in the line of the thirteenth section, and so far as I am individually concerned I have no particular objection to it with a little modification, or rather strengthening it a little perhaps I might say.

The bill provides that the report of the commission and its certificate shall be prima facie evidence in all such cases in court, and that the action of the district attorney shall be based upon it when a case is sent up by the commission. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont seems to drop out the idea very largely that the commission has anything to do with the case. I want to suggest to him that if on the second page of his amendment, beginning after the word "petition," in line 25, and ending with the word "persons," in line 27, these words were inserted I think it would improve the amendment:

"And if on such hearing it be made to appear to such court from the report and certificate of the commission forwarded to the district attorney as provided in the next preceding section, or on the report of any such person or persons as the court may have appointed to inquire into the matter, that the lawful order or requirement of said commission," &c.

I think if these words were inserted in place of those which I have indicated should be stricken out, it would still adhere to the theory of the action being in part at least on the report and certificate of the commission.

The thirteenth section as it stands in the bill provides that the court may issue a preliminary injunction simply on the report and certificate of the commission that the transportation company refuses to desist from violation of law. All that I desire in that section is to put in it the amendment which I have read, coming in in line 25 and ending after the word "persons," in line 27. Then, as I am on the floor, if that should be done, instead of striking out any of section 12, I would suggest, in order to make it harmonious with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont giving the right to the district attorney or to the commission to sue in the district where the offense occurs or to sue in the locality where the main office of the railroad company is located, that in the thirty-second line of section 12, after the word "which," we insert:

Such common carrier has its principal office or in which.

So as to read:

For the judicial district in which such common carrier has its principal office or in which such violation of law occurred.

I think if those two amendments were made, the one I have just read to section 12, and the one that I read before to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont in lieu of section 13, as far as I am concerned I should have no objection to his amendment and I think it would really strengthen the bill. I shall propose my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WALTHALL. Mr. President, I have listened with much interest to the discussion of the pending measure, and have given the subject some independent consideration. My determination is to vote for this bill unless it shall be so amended as to make it more objectionable than when it came from the hands of the committee, though it does not, in some of its important features, meet the approval of my judgment. I feel sure it is not presented as a perfect measure by its distinguished author, who has exhibited such marked ability and fairness in his patient effort to solve one of the most perplexing problems of the age, for his experience has taught him that those who have considered the subject most maturely have found in it the greatest difficulties.

If it were proven here to-day that railroad companies are not now oppressing the people in their dealings with them, I would still support any reasonable Congressional measure looking to their supervision and control, because of the undeniable fact that such oppression, in the absence of legal restraint, is possible, and no adequate protection can be afforded by State laws. If we but consider how immeasurable the railroad interest of this country has become, how vast is the wealth, and how immense the powers of these corporations, the necessity forces itself upon us to set, if we can, some bounds to what they may do in their business transactions with the people of the country. Their lines to-day stretch out 140,000 miles and their ownership is estimated to equal one-sixth of the entire possessions of all the people living under our Government. To this many millions are being added yearly by the construction of thousands of miles of new railroad. It has not been many years since all the railroad property in the Union was worth less than the amount of this yearly addition.

The people pay these companies over eight hundred millions a year for transportation, and the commodities transported run up to fifteen billions a year in value. It is estimated that eighteen hundred thousand men are employed in constructing and operating railroads. Some of these companies have more patronage to bestow than a Cabinet officer, and some of their presidents have been paid larger salaries than the President of the United States. Many of them receive and disburse vastly more money per annum than passes through the treasury of many of the States of the Union. The men at the head of some of them are among the ablest business men in the nation. They have wealth to employ talent and power to command influence. They are organized for gain, and those who manage them, however just and liberal they may be as men, manage them for gain and are influenced by the same considerations which control the managers of other purely business institutions.

Every interest in this country is dependent upon railroads; agriculture and commerce are especially at their mercy. With all this power in their hands no man can give a valid reason why these corporations should not be put under the wholesome restraints of the law and the oppressive exercise of their power made impossible. It is no answer to say that self-interest will prevent them from imposing undue burdens on traffic lest their business may suffer by its falling off. If the burdens are possible, what objection can there be to the double guarantee against them of both self-interest and the law? The very tendency of power, lodge it where you will, is toward abuse, and railroad power forms no exception to the rule. I have no word of denunciation for the railroad managers of the country as a class. They are as worthy as the men of any other class; they are just like other men, and it is because they are so and are influenced by the same motives that influence other men that I want their power placed under control.

The contest between the people and the railroad companies originated in, and is kept alive and stimulated by, the same motive in both the parties, and that the motive of self-interest. One wants the service for the lowest price, and the other demands the highest price, just as other men in other callings buy for the lowest and sell for the highest price they can. The instinct of gain is strong as it is natural, and we expect to see and do see the evidences of it in every line of trade, in every department of business, in every phase of human industry, and in all the business dealings of men with each other. The merchant does not sell a barrel of flour for $8 if he can get $9 for it. No more does the cotton-planter sell his produce for 8 cents per pound if he can get 9. No tradesman, no professional man, nor laboring man puts a lower price on his wares or his work when he can get a higher one as readily.

But in dealing with each other we have the advantage of dealing at arm's-length, which is our protection. When the merchant charges a given price for his goods we are not bound to buy from him, as there are other merchants and other markets; nor is he bound to purchase our produce at the price we name. Nor is one man bound to employ or be employed by any other particular man for service at a price named, there being other men ready to serve or to be served. But when we deal with railroad companies we have not this liberty, though it may be true that we are not literally bound to ship our produce by a railroad if the price does not suit us. Practically, we are bound to do it or lose the privilege of marketing our produce, and thus we really have no choice. There is no other railroad in reach, or, if there be, competition is destroyed by an agreement that the charges on both roads shall be the same. We have no voice in the contract; the terms are dictated by one of the contracting parties, and the other must accept or do worse.

Railroad terms, it is fair to say, are not always exorbitant; often they are not only reasonable but extremely low. For instance, during the New Orleans Exposition passengers were carried from the town I live in to New Orleans and back, about 600 miles the round trip, for about $6, and at the same rate from other points, 1 cent a mile, when the regular price—itself quite reasonable—was 3 cents.

Other excursion trips are constantly being made on other roads at greatly reduced rates. These rates are often so low as to be barely remunerative; still they pay something, otherwise they would not be given. But in these cases the people and the companies deal at arm's-length, as the people deal with each other. The people were not bound to go to the exposition, but might go or not, as the price made it to their advantage or not, and it was to the advantage of the railroad companies to induce them to go, self-interest, as usual, controlling both parties. But we never heard of a reduction corresponding to excursion rates being given for produce which is bound to go by a particular route. In the winter, when cotton-bales, where I live, are piled up at the stations for transportation to market, no reduced rates are offered to the shippers. The companies have no interest in making such an offer. They know the cotton must go; the shippers' interest being to ship it at the rate charged, high or low, rather than keep it. It must go to market, it must go by rail, and the shipper must pay the charges, whatever they may be. These charges are not always unreasonable, though the shipper is not consulted. Sometimes they are moderate enough, but sometimes they are not, and always they are liable to be unreasonable, the interest of one party being to make them so and the other being powerless to resist. It being possible for them to be always unreasonable is, with me, reason enough for putting limits on the exercise of a dangerous power in the hands of strong institutions, which are rapidly extending and expanding and every day growing in influence and wealth.

If the people had all the power and the railroad companies none, if they could dictate the terms on which the companies should serve them, the necessity would be no less in that case than now to curb the tendencies of self-interest.

Is a corporation likely to be more liberal and considerate than an individual would be in like circumstances? I will not say that no man can be found so just that he would work for us or sell to us as cheap if he knew we were compelled to have his labor or his property as if he knew we could supply ourselves elsewhere entirely independent of him. Such men may have lived, and possibly do now, but it is not for such as these that laws are needed or are made.

But no sane man believes that there is a railroad or other corporation in existence which even professes to act up to so saintly a standard in its business, and no more do I think the people would if all the power were in their hands. Those who make the laws for the government of the people should see to it that the power of supervision and control to which I have referred should be lodged somewhere, so that it may be exercised for the security of the people against wrongs, whether existing now or threatened, or even possible. According to the interpretation of the Constitution which is generally, though not universally, accepted at this day, the States are powerless to afford protection which will be at once substantial and adequate. Their railroads are parts or appendages of great trunk lines over which their business in large part is conducted. Much of their traffic is with other States, and the Constitution gives the power not to them but to Congress to regulate commerce among the States. Take my own State for example, and it is not singular in this regard. The railroads in Mississippi, except one or two very short lines, are all "interstate" roads, running in other States as well as that, or are branches or connections of such as do so run, over which traffic passes between the States.

In a recent opinion of the supreme court of that State the position is taken and supported by most vigorous reasoning that the regulation of the operations of a corporation and prescribing its rates of charges on business carried on across State lines belong to the State which created the corporation and do not amount to a regulation of commerce; and so long as there is no discrimination against such traffic there is no interference with commerce between the States and the power of the State Legislature is unaffected by the commercial clause of the Constitution. As an original proposition, aside from the tendency of modern opinion, this view commends itself strongly to my mind. But on the idea that the transportation of goods from one State to another is commerce between the States and regulating the charges therefor is regulating commerce, the remedy seems to be with Congress for most of the evils complained of, and the people whose State governments can not afford the remedy have turned their eyes to Congress.

It is rarely disputed now that commerce among the States consists not only of intercourse between their citizens and the purchase and sale and exchange of commodities, but includes also the transportation of persons and property, and the power to regulate it seems to embrace all the means and instrumentalities and agencies by which that commerce is carried on. The matter of transportation from one State to or through another is considered a constituent of interstate commerce itself, with which Congress alone can deal, and that seems to be the protection against conflict in the legislation of different States, each regulating the transportation in favor of its own products and its own people. In my own State the principal complaints are of charges on freights from points in Mississippi to New Orleans, Memphis, and Mobile to New York and Eastern cities and to St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Louisville, or from those cities to points in Mississippi. The rates on shipments from one point to another in the State are sometimes criticised, but these shipments are comparatively light, and the real trouble is as to charges on cotton, lumber, and a few other things sent out of the State, and provisions and goods of various kinds brought there from the cities named and other points outside the State.

There are some important railroads in that State which begin and end within its limits, but these are engaged in interstate traffic in connection with other lines which join them. But it seems clear that the transportation of commodities between New Orleans and Yazoo City, Miss., or New Orleans and Aberdeen, Miss., is as much subject to Congressional regulation as that between New Orleans and Brookhaven, or between Mobile and Meridian, though New Orleans and Brookhaven are on the same unbroken line of railroad, and so are Mobile and Meridian, while Yazoo City and Aberdeen are on lines which begin and end in Mississippi. But in connection with the lines they join, these lines are the instruments and means of commerce among the States, just as the unbroken lines are which are engaged in the same sort of business. The power to regulate commerce among the States does not stop at State lines. If it did it would be a useless power. "If Congress has the power to regulate it, that power must be exercised wherever the subject exists."

Every portion of every State has the right to participate in this commerce, just as every portion of the United States has the right to participate in the commerce with foreign nations. This can not be if the power stops short at State boundaries and can not be exercised within the territorial jurisdiction of a State. This power, "whatever it may be, must be exercised within the territorial jurisdiction of the States." All this was long ago decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the familiar case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, reported in 9 Wheaton. See also the Daniel Ball in 10 Wallace.

So it would seem that the principal transportation of commodities on all the railroads in Mississippi, as in other States of the Union, and that which has chiefly led to the demand for the regulation of the transportation by law, falls within the power of Congress, if the prevailing opinion as to the extent of that power is correct.

So much for the question of power; and it is now left to consider the best mode of exercising it. It should not in any mode be exercised harshly or oppressively, unjustly or unreasonably, or otherwise than with perfect impartiality between the people on the one hand and the railroads on the other. Let it be done dispassionately and with due regard for the rights of all parties and for the public welfare. For one, I would see it employed as fairly as if the people had the power, and the effort was to restrain them and make it impossible for them to oppress the railroads. It may be said I am a friend of railroads, and so I am. Where is the thinking man who has his country's interest at heart who will say he is hostile to these great enterprises or to any other which add vastly to the country's wealth and increase incalculably the conveniences of the people? Who is there among us that would see them so crippled in their credit or impaired in their powers that the conveniences and promptness, the regularity and comparative safety of their operations, can not be kept up to its present standard or even improved? Is there one who would favor a law imposing needless burdens on them, or requiring their service for less than reasonable compensation, or otherwise unjustly dealing with them?

The people are friends of railroads, just as I am; they want fair dealing with them, just as I do; but they want it on both sides, and so do I. I would see reciprocal relations established between them and the people, founded on a spirit of toleration and justice on either side. I would see the parties deal reasonably with each other. Their interests are so far interwoven and there is such interdependence between them that antagonism can not fail to injure both. There is nothing for the people and nothing for the railroads in the blind partisan championship of either side, and the people want none of this. That man hurts and harms the public who foments discord between any classes of the community and breeds antagonism between any of the business interests of the country, and he is a public benefactor who reconciles great interests which conflict and brings the contending parties to a proper middle ground of understanding and adjustment. I believe such result can be reached in the matter we are considering, though the process may be gradual, if only both sides will be temperate in the discussion of the evils and of the remedies which are proposed.

Already the movement for the supervision of railroad companies has had effect aside from the enactment of laws; rates have been reduced in some cases, and in others the railroad companies have found it necessary to explain the basis of their tariffs, and thus the public have gained information which has satisfied them on many points not before fully understood.

The opinion that the movement has led to good is gaining ground with many thoughtful railroad managers and investors, and many who at one time looked upon it as endangering all railroad interests, because in the outset extreme measures were proposed, look with favor upon reasonable laws regulating transportation as the means at once of satisfying the people and restraining railroad companies from excesses which may be expected in the absence of restraint.

As to the exact mode of exercising this power, the range of inquiry is so broad and the subject is so far-reaching and difficult that no mode has ever been suggested that is not open to objection even in the mind of the party proposing it. The subject bristles with difficulties, and the field is full of dangers, and as yet has not been wholly explored. The subject has been fully discussed in legislative halls and before the people. There has been much declamation as to the grievances and no little denunciation of those charged to be the authors of them, better calculated to excite the popular mind than to point out remedies which may not prove worse than existing evils. On the other hand, much that is instructive and of practical value has been written and spoken on the subject by men who have earnestly sought to master it and so to deal with it that the rights both of the people and the railroad companies shall be respected and protected. Such men have recognized that the rights of both must suffer if the laws of trade which are known and the fluctuations of commerce which can not be foreseen are disregarded. Consequently they find the reasons all in favor of the simplest and most flexible system which can reach the largest proportion of the grievances most generally complained of, and which is most adaptable to the ever-varying conditions of the business proposed to be regulated. I subscribe to this view.

With many the favorite mode seems to be through an interstate-commerce commission; but to my mind there are grave objections to such a commission. Congress acts only under delegated powers; and where is the warrant to be found for their delegation by Congress to a commission? Congress may undoubtedly create a commission and confer upon it given powers, if they be so precisely and narrowly described and limited as to leave the commission no discretionary authority in any matter where its action would be final; but they would leave the commission no field for any useful work. Does any Senator feel safe in announcing that Congress can confer on a commission the power to regulate the rates of transportation so as to bind the railroad companies? And if it can not fix rates, what good purpose that is practical can a commission serve? But if the power be conceded, the work is beyond the capacity of any commission that can be appointed. There are more than fifteen hundred railroads in the United States, stretching over about 140,000 miles of territory. Some of them cost millions to construct a single mile, and, by comparison, some were built for inconsiderable sums, and the cost of none of them is the true test of their present value.

Some run through densely populated, rich, and prosperous regions, and some through those which are sparsely settled, where the people and the soil are poor alike. Trains on some run every fifteen minutes in the day and on others they run tri-weekly. At intervals of about 10 miles or less, upon the average, on most important roads, are stations from which goods may be shipped to other stations on other roads in the Union which are not purely local lines. These shipments vary in value, in the difficulty of handling them, in the necessity for speedy transportation and prompt delivery, and in the measure of responsibility for loss, damage, or delay. They may consist of coal worth $40 a carload or silks or laces worth thousands of dollars a case with hundreds of cases in a car. They may consist of ice, or live stock, or fruits, which must go through with speed; or of lumber or brick, which would neither waste nor perish by delay. The variety of freights is endless, and so is the variety of the questions which the commission must consider, as affecting the rights of hundreds of railroads and millions of people, before it could arrive at a tariff of charges which the commission itself would say is even approximately just to shipper or carrier.

How long would it take the commission to perform even imperfectly the duty of gathering the necessary data on which to proceed advisedly, and then determining, on the material collected, what rates would be reasonable on all the "interstate" roads in the Union? So long, I venture to say, that before the completion of the work the changes in business in this active age and in the conditions of the railroads would make necessary a re-examination of the subject and a readjustment of the rates.

There are other objections to an interstate-commerce commission, growing out of the fullness of its powers, the disastrous consequences of its mistakes, and the dangers and temptations incident to the position of its members; but those will suggest themselves, and I need not now discuss them. It is enough that such a scheme seems impracticable, even if clearly constitutional, to lead me to prefer a simple one whose constitutionality is beyond dispute.

Judge REAGAN, an able, an earnest Congressman from Texas, who for more than ten years has been laboring to master this great question and has been pressing its importance upon the attention of Congress and the country, at the last session secured the passage of a bill through the lower House by a vote of 2 to 1 to regulate interstate railroad traffic. In advocating that measure he expressed the opinion that "no law fixing rates of freight could be made to work with justice either to the railroads or the public," and the same conclusion has been reached by others who have maturely considered the subject from a wholly impartial standpoint. To me this seems clear, and the reasons for it are equally forcible when applied to rates fixed by an interstate commerce commission.

The Reagan bill, as it passed the House, though far from perfect and far from satisfactory to me and to many who voted for it, including its author, I suppose, as it was considerably changed after he introduced it, has in it the idea which seems to me the correct one for practical legislation embodied in general provisions, prohibitory and mandatory, to restrain and direct the railroad companies and protect shippers from all unfair, unjust, and unreasonable dealings, with stringent and specific remedies for a violation of these provisions. I think a system built on this idea would be far better than a commission.

I prefer a law which requires that all freight charges between all interstate points as to all persons, all distances, and all kinds and quantities of freight shall be reasonable, and provides speedy redress in case of violation, and imposes penalty, if the violation be willful, in any court of competent jurisdiction, whether State or Federal. Details should be prescribed having reference to the grievances most complained of, such as requiring rates to be published, prohibiting unjust discriminations between persons and places, and forbidding oppression in any mode, direct or indirect. But there is, I think, no longer room for doubt that arbitrary rules which are inflexible as to long and short hauls, or as to shipments in bulk or small parcels, are injudicious and dangerous. It seems now almost agreed, at least in this body, that such iron rules are likely to defeat the object we aim at, the relief and protection of the people.

The objections I have offered to a commission under Congressional law do not apply, except perhaps in very small measure, to commissions under State laws where there is constitutional warrant for their creation. The sphere of action of such commissions is comparatively small, their duties are far less complicated, and their powers are limited and restricted. In a number of States such commissions are working well.

I am wedded to no particular system and will oppose none, though its details may not satisfy my judgment of what is needed, if it gives promise of something like fair dealing and even slight protection to the people of the country, and does not threaten greater evils than those we seek to escape. For want of a better measure I am ready to vote for the bill in its present shape, though I do not approve the creation of a commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. CULLOM. I suggested a while ago some amendments to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, and also a slight amendment to the bill. I propose to change the amendment which I suggested to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont by proposing to insert after the word "petition," in line 25 of his amendment, the words:

And on such hearing the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated.

And leave the rest of the Senator's amendment as it stands.

I think that as amended it is in substance what I desire incorporated in the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, and it will waive the necessity of my offering the amendment I originally suggested. If that amendment is adopted I shall then move to strike out of section 12 of the bill all after the word "law," in line 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 25 of the proposed amendment, after the word "petition," it is proposed to insert the words:

And on such hearing the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then a semicolon should be inserted after the clause just voted in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A semicolon will be inserted. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Now I move to strike out all after the word "law," in line 24 of section 12, to the end of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], to strike out the words which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out of section 12 all after the word "law," in line 24, as follows:

But if said common carrier shall neglect or refuse, within the time specified, to desist from such violation of the law or to make reparation for the injury done, in compliance with the report and notice of the commission as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the commission to forthwith certify the fact of such neglect or refusal, and forward a copy of its report and such certificate to the district attorney of the United States for the judicial district in which such violation of law occurred for redress and punishment as in this act provided.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator from Illinois will explain why this clause is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. CULLOM. Since the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont has been adopted and the amendment to it which I proposed just now I think this part of the twelfth section is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It embarrasses rather than helps it.

Mr. CULLOM. It encumbers it and makes the meaning of the bill doubtful to have that part of section 12 left in the bill. That is the only reason for the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Has the original section 13 now disappeared from the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. It has all gone from the bill, and the amendment of the Senator from Vermont takes its place.

Mr. CONGER. I now offer the amendment I proposed heretofore in section 1, line 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 6, after the word "used," it is proposed to insert:

Under a common control, management, or arrangement.

So as to read:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory of the United States, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the bill means that now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the amendment mean precisely? Suppose a shipper at Saint Paul, Minn., of flour to Liverpool makes an arrangement to ship through——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Steamers used by railroads or by individual parties, if under the same control, are subjected to the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if the flour manufacturer at Minneapolis wishes to send one hundred barrels of flour to Liverpool and sends them by rail to New York, and then by a continuous arrangement with a steamship line from New York to Liverpool, are you to say that no less rate shall be applied to that through shipment, including the ocean, for the same distance, which is a longer haul certainly as it is called, than for a shorter one? Is that what it means?

Mr. CONGER. It applies to water communication on the lakes and rivers within the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does it say that?

Mr. CONGER. If you read it in connection you will see that it does.

Mr. PLATT. I think if the Senator from Vermont will read on down a little farther to line 9 of section 1, he will see that this bill does not under any circumstances apply to goods which start in this country by rail and are shipped across the water to a foreign country. It applies to goods which start in this country and are landed in an adjacent foreign country, as it seemed that it was necessary that it should in order to regulate our own domestic commerce; but it was not the intention of the bill to apply to commerce or goods which start in this country and end in a foreign country not an adjacent country.

Mr. HALE. Does it not apply to that part of the transit of such goods as takes place in this country?

Mr. PLATT. Not at all, unless it be from one State to another State in this country.

Mr. HALE. Take for instance the case cited by the Senator from Vermont of a shipment made originally from Minneapolis where the shipment is entire from Minneapolis by rail, by water, and by sea, to Liverpool.

Mr. PLATT. With a through bill of lading to Liverpool?

Mr. HALE. With a through bill of lading to Liverpool. It passes from one State to another.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think this first section of the bill would touch it.

Mr. HALE. What is the interpretation of the Senator from Illinois who is in charge of the bill upon that particular point?

Mr. CULLOM. So far as I am concerned, I do not think the first section of the bill at all interferes so far as the shipment on the water is concerned. It regulates the land part of the transportation from the point of starting to the point of transshipment to a foreign country.

Mr. HALE. That does not satisfy me, because I find the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Connecticut at odds on the interpretation of the bill. My question was whether on a shipment from a Western port, Minneapolis for instance, to Liverpool through, this bill in any part of it touches that portion of the route lying in the United States as part of the through shipment from Minneapolis to Liverpool. The Senator from Connecticut says that he does not think it touches at all upon the land part of the shipment. The Senator from Illinois says that it does not touch the sea part. Now I want to know whether it touches any part of a shipment of that kind made from Minneapolis right through by bill of lading to Liverpool.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me there can be no doubt about the fact that as to any foreign shipment by rail from any part of the interior of the United States to Boston, if you please, to be sent from there to Liverpool, this bill will regulate the railroad or internal part of the shipment; in other words, the shipment of the goods from Chicago or Des Moines, or wherever it may be, to Boston or New York; after you get there and put it on the vessel that goes to Liverpool, this bill has nothing to do with that part of it.

Mr. HALE. Nobody, I suppose, ever raised any question of that kind; but the Senator from Connecticut thought, in a case of the kind agreed upon by the Senator from Illinois and me, it did not touch that part of the shipment that went through our territory.

Mr. MCMILLAN. In a shipment from Minneapolis to Liverpool by rail and by sea, would any portion of that route be affected by this bill?

Mr. HALE. That is precisely the question I asked.

Mr. CULLOM. In a shipment from any point to Liverpool on a through bill of lading, a thousand miles of the shipment, perhaps, going by rail across this country, and then to Liverpool by sea, there is no kind of reason why that shipment should not be regulated by this bill just as well as any shipment from Iowa to Boston.

Mr. HALE. Where is the part of the bill in which this particular point that we are now somewhat at odds upon is provided for?

Mr. PLATT. I think I was mistaken in the statement that I made in reply to the question of the Senator from Maine, or else I did not understand his question. I agree with the chairman of the committee. The first section provides:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory of the United States, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of transshipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, let me ask the Senator what is the effect of this first section to which the Senator from Michigan proposes an amendment when considered with the fourth section, taking the illustration made by the Senator from Maine. Here is a cargo of flour, for example, to be shipped from Minneapolis to Liverpool. I understand from the statement of the Senator from Illinois that that cargo of flour comes within the control of this bill until it reaches its point of departure to Liverpool; that is, New York or Boston. Now, the original point of departure is Minneapolis. The point of destination so far as this bill is concerned is New York or Boston. The fourth section of the bill provides that between these two points no greater rate shall be charged for any transportation of like products for a short distance than is charged for a long distance.

Now, do I understand this bill to provide, taking these sections together, that the rate fixed at Minneapolis for flour to New York city shall control the rate for all intermediate shipments between Minneapolis and New York city, whether the carriage is wholly by rail or whether partly by rail and partly by water?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. If that be so, I submit to the Senator from Illinois that it will be very inconvenient to hold transportation companies responsible for that rate, as it is within my knowledge that flour is transported, and has been for several years transported, from Minneapolis to Glasgow, Scotland, at the rate of a little less than 80 cents per barrel or 40 cents per 100 pounds. It seems to me with that construction of the bill the fourth section will be very inconvenient.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator knows that any system of regulating through rates that leaves one railroad in a position where it can take advantage of another in this country is unjust. The purpose of this provision in relation to water transportation is to so frame the section as that all American railroads, as well as those that run outside into Canada, shall have to come up to the provisions of the bill to some extent. There is no provision in this bill that at all interferes with water transportation unless it is operated under some arrangement with a railroad company or common carrier by rail by which it can take advantage of any other railroad that has no water connection at all.

Mr. ALLISON. Now the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] proposes an amendment. Surely no ship or vessel navigating the lakes will navigate those lakes except in connection with some land transportation line.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose a vessel goes to Duluth unconnected with any railroad line and takes there a cargo of flour at a fixed rate to Buffalo. It will take that cargo of flour to Buffalo, and when it reaches Buffalo the New York Central Railroad will take hold of it. Therefore without a specific arrangement this railway and this independent vessel can fix any rates they may choose, regardless of this bill, if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan be adopted.

Mr. CULLOM. That may be so. It has been the judgment I believe of almost everybody who has paid attention to the subject that we can not undertake to regulate water ways in all business done on the water, and we therefore have left them out except in cases where the boats on the lakes, if you please, are part of a continuous line with some railroad like the New York Central operating from New York to Buffalo.

Mr. HALE. How often is there such a connection between the railways and the water-intervening transportation where the law would recognize them as one route or combination?

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose as a matter of fact, taking the New York Central, that that railroad has business contracts and arrangements with lines of boats upon the lakes running between Buffalo and Chicago or Duluth, or wherever else lines may run where they can take freight, and nearly all the railroads that make any water connection at all have contracts with lines of steamers by which their freight is taken back and forth from the different points just as if it were carried all the way on the railroad lines.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the fourth section applies?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. The bill of lading determines that. If a man gets a bill of lading from New York to Duluth the bill of lading shows that there is a line of steamers under his management; otherwise he gives a bill of lading to Buffalo, and there bulk is broken and somebody else takes it.

Now, if I understand the question of the Senator from Iowa it is whether the fourth section, which we call the long haul and short haul clause, applies to those lines which consist partly of railroad and partly of water communication. I understand that it does, and it was with that understanding and with that idea that I felt that it was essential to any short-haul law which was passed with reference to interstate commerce that it should be limited to the same original point of departure; and if it were limited to the same original point of departure I do not see what difficulty could occur. Take Duluth, if you please, and call that the original point of departure. Flour starts East for New York on a continuous route by a line which is all under the control of the same carrier. Now, if those words which have been stricken out were in the provision I can not see why a man shipping East by that line should be charged any more from Duluth for a short distance than for a langer distance.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, but those words are stricken out.

Mr. PLATT. They were stricken out against my vote.

Mr. ALLISON. But now it appears that this water communication is to be added to the railway communication, and is to control the intermediate traffic. It seems to me that that is an impracticable thing. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER], who I believe has voted to insert that provision, wants to except all that portion of our country which surrounds the lakes from the operation of the provision by exempting vessels on the lakes from it. I submit that that is not an amendment which ought to be adopted.

Mr. CONGER. My objection to this bill as it stood was that its provisions applied "to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used for a continuous carriage or shipment." If a vessel is used for a continuous shipment until the freight reaches rail and is taken by water afterward, it would apply to any vessel that carried any freight that was coming or going by rail. Therefore it would apply on our rivers or our lakes to any vessel that came and offered itself to carry freight.

The friends of this bill say that it meant to apply to a continuous carriage under an arrangement for carriage by rail and then by water and then by rail again by some contract or agreement. In order to avoid imposing the duties that follow in the rest of this bill as a penalty on any vessel that happened to be carrying freight from one lake port to another that had come by rail, I wanted to define more particularly that this should be under some common control, management, or arrangement of both railroad and vessel to make the latter come under the provisions of this bill.

This makes it more definite that it shall not apply to every vessel that happens to get freight that has come by rail, as the bill itself seems to indicate, but may apply to those classes of vessels which, by a common control or a common management or a common arrangement, are engaged as a through line partly by rail and partly by water.

If this bill means anything, it is a bill that ought not to be passed without this amendment. If it is to control every vessel on the lakes and on the rivers, and control and make subject to the penalties provided in this bill every boat on the Mississippi that happens to carry freight which comes to a point on the river by rail or which may leave the river at some point to be carried by rail, it utterly destroys the inland navigation of the United States as effectually in my judgment as any bill that could be passed.

I have no objection, if a boat and a railroad have some common control, arrangement, or management by which they can understand they come under the provisions of this bill, to let them come under its provisions.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it not apparent that all the vessels navigating the lakes and all the boats navigating the rivers will have no such arrangement after this bill passes, but the vessels will simply run up and down the Mississippi River until they reach the point where they know there is a fixed rate and a low rate by rail and there unload their freight, which will be picked up by the railroad? So of these vessels on the lakes. Can not that be done? Here is an immense traffic, as the Senator from Michigan knows, from Saint Paul—not from Duluth, because the through contracts are made from Saint Paul or Minneapolis to transport grain and flour to all the Eastern points and to return with cargoes of anthracite coal from Pennsylvania. The lake vessels engaged in that traffic do not need to make any arrangement to fix the lake rate at a cent a ton for so many miles. That freight is landed at Buffalo, where it meets a New York State railway not under the control of this bill at all. So if the amendment of the Senator from Michigan is adopted, how does your bill affect the rate of such shipments to New York?

It seems to me it is a manifest injustice to those people who do not happen to live upon the lakes and to those railways that are obliged to make their entire carriage by rail from points in the West to the seaboard. So the ultimate effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan will be to place the people who happen to live on the lakes in a more favored condition than the people who are obliged to live and do live elsewhere.

Mr. CONGER. I can not see that it has any such effect at all. All around the lakes and along the rivers, if anybody has at a particular point a shipment of freight to make he charters a vessel. That is done everywhere. The vessel takes a load of grain or anything of that kind from Chicago, from Detroit, from Cleveland, from Toledo to some other point of destination. The vessels take their load of freight from one lake port to another lake port with no connection and no arrangement. They go according to the charter. But under the provisions of this bill if they carry freight that has come by rail, then they are liable to the pains and penalties of this bill, simply because they carry that freight, not that there is any contract, any arrangement, any common control.

I want to avoid that provision of the bill which fastens upon vessels doing business in their own name and in their own way upon the waters of the United States; I want to relieve them from the liabilities of this bill and the penalty of thousands of dollars unless there is some arrangement or privity of contract between the railroad and the vessel. Then let them come under its provisions.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator from Michigan will see that, unless I am utterly mistaken about this matter, that absolutely lets out, so to speak, the entire region on the borders of the lakes from the operation of this bill, and all they have to do is to arrange their transportation accordingly, and thereupon they say, "This is not a through line; we are running independently from Buffalo to Duluth; we take whatever is handed to us at Duluth and deliver it at Buffalo;" and the New York Central Railway fixes a rate there, and they are entirely absolved from the provisions of this bill.

If this is good for one section of the country it is good for the whole country, and I do not want to see a provision inserted here which will make a discrimination in favor of all those people who happen to live upon the borders of the lakes and rivers as against the people who are obliged to use interior railway communication to reach the seaboard with their products.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, there are some things this bill does not apply to directly. It does not apply to railroads in the first place; it does not apply to water communication in the second place, and it does not apply to freights in the third place. Senators should get those ideas out of their minds. It applies simply to common carriers who undertake to transport freight or passengers of an interstate character. That is all. It does not apply to anything else.

Mr. ALLISON. That I understood, if the Senator from Connecticut will allow me to interrupt him to say so much.

Mr. PLATT. So it seems to me the dangers which gentlemen suppose will occur between the water routes and the railroads do not exist. If they do, I can not see them.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. If Duluth and Buffalo were in the same State, or if there was no intervening State, I agree; but this water carriage runs through three or four States on its way to Buffalo.

Mr. PLATT. Then, unless a railroad is used between the point of starting and the point of destination, this bill does not apply?

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

Mr. PLATT. And if a railroad is used it does apply?

Mr. McMILLAN. Allow me to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. Suppose under this bill an arrangement is made by steamers on the line of the lakes from Duluth to Buffalo in connection with a line of railroad to the Atlantic coast; is not that within the rule and is not every part of it within the rule? And therefore the portion of it from Duluth to Buffalo would be a part regulated by this act.

Mr. PLATT. It depends altogether on where the common carrier proposes to land his goods. If the common carrier taking the shipment in Duluth proposes to land his goods at Buffalo, this bill applies to him and to that transaction. Then if another common carrier takes the shipment from Buffalo and carries it to New York, this bill applies to that carrier and that other transaction.

Mr. McMILLAN. The instance I cited was of a line of steamers from Duluth to Buffalo running in connection with a line of railroad from Buffalo to New York carrying freight and passengers as their business.

Mr. PLATT. If the contract made in Duluth is to land the passenger or the property in New York, then it comes within the provisions of this bill. If it is wholly by water, to land the passengers and property at Buffalo, then it does not come within the provisions of this bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. If they are carriers by a common arrangement, a general business from Duluth to New York, a shipment from Duluth to Buffalo on that line, a line controlled by that arrangement it seems to me certainly would come within the provisions of this bill, although the particular shipment may not extend beyond Buffalo. Still that is part of a line engaged in doing business holding themselves out to the public as transacting the business—of common carrier from Duluth to New York.

Mr. PLATT. If they hold themselves out to the public and make contracts to transport the goods to New York certainly the whole contract is within the provisions of this bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then the Senator from Michigan proposes to amend this bill so as to impose the limitations upon other lines of railroad, which would deprive all commerce at the terminus of a road of the benefit of competition which may exist there. It would affect them to that extent, the lines of transportation upon the lakes as well as the lines of transportation by rail; and it would deprive the Senator's State of the benefit of competition on the lakes. He wants, therefore, to exempt independent boats, so that they shall have the benefit of competition on the lakes; but those who depend on transportation by rail from the interior of the continent he insists shall have no benefit of competition, because by his amendment he has ingrafted a provision here which absolutely forbids it.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan did not give any such vote as the Senator from Minnesota unadvisedly and intrusively has alleged here. If he did, that has nothing to do with the merits of this provision.

Mr. McMILLAN. Allow me to ask the Senator if he did not vote for the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Michigan voted for an amendment which he thought was a very desirable one and which he will vote for again in the Senate and continue to advocate, but it has nothing to do with this proposition one way or the other. The Senator from Michigan votes for whatever he chooses to vote for, and he intends to do so.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not intend to dispute the Senator's right to do it. I only desired to show the Senator that he voted to impose disabilities on us and he ought to be willing to incur the same obligations.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Michigan has not voted to impose disabilities on others. The Senator from Michigan has endeavored to the best of his understanding—and he believes he understands the question—to save the State of Minnesota from the evil effects of a law which without this amendment would be very injurious to that State and to all other States, and which the Senator from Minnesota does not yet see the importance of, but he will in time. It will come to him gradually and break upon him whenever the amendment which has been adopted in committee shall be stricken out. Whenever the law begins to operate without it, then the Senator and a good many other Senators will hear from it in a way that will be a reminder, agreeable or otherwise.

Mr. McMILLAN. Not in the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. CONGER. I thought Senators had a right to vote according to their own judgment without being criticised here. We are in Committee of the Whole, I believe.

The Senator from Michigan voted in behalf of Minnesota people and Kansas people and all other people on this great continent that railroads should not charge for half the distance on the same line of road more for carrying freight than they did from the point of departure, double the distance. The proposition is plain. I have read since I cast that vote the great argument of Mr. Basil W. Duke. I have read it all through in pamphlet, in which he attempted to controvert that proposition, and I say if Senators rely on an argument of that kind they are relying on a broken reed.

The argument is not good, as any man can show with time. I find the argument of Mr. Basil W. Duke in a pamphlet circulated, the argument which in one form or another has been taken up by every Senator who opposed the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. It is the whole gist of the argument changed in form. Different members look through a kaleidoscope at the argument.

The argument of Basil W. Duke, of Kentucky, in one form or another has been repeated and reiterated ad nauseam on this floor. I read the pamphlet right through to see if I could find in the original argument itself anything to sustain these gentlemen, and I could not. It may be my fault, but I could not do it.

Now, what is this proposition? I have tried to show the Senate, and I have satisfied my own mind, that the provisions of the bill—although the committee say it will not have the effect which I feared—might have the effect, and would have the effect, to impose burdens upon the entire inland navigation interests of the United States. I have said to the Committee of the Whole Senate that we had expended something like $173,000,000 in improving these water communications, these highways upon which every inhabitant of the United States may go and travel as upon a public highway with his own vehicle, whether it be a dugout, a barge, a bateau, a steamboat, or a scow, with his own freight, in his own way—the great highways of the people.

I believe that this bill without some amendment of this kind will impose all the restrictions and all the penalties and all the obligations it prescribes upon every common carrier by water upon these highways which we are year by year called upon to make appropriations to improve, and this year we have a bill which amounts to eighteen or twenty million dollars. We lay a restriction upon that class of common carriage upon water which would render useless all the attempts of this Government to improve these great highways. That is my belief about it, earnest, sincere, after the most careful attention I have given to it. Every one knows that any bill which lays its hand upon the water communications of the country, any bill which impedes the right of the citizen to go on these great highways, whether improved by the money of the nation or whether the gift of God, suitable for transportation, if it should restrict their convenience, if it should restrict their navigability, if it should prevent the citizens from using these communications and highways of the nation, the Senate and the House, the Congress that passes such a bill and the President that approved such a bill, would meet with a storm of indignation and reproach from the people of the United States that no man could stand up under. It is to avoid the possibility of such a construction that I have said in regard to water communication that where the carriers by water have some common management, control, or even arrangement with railroads by which they are a continuous line, then as they have entered into that arrangement and given that control and that management voluntarily, with the law before them, they shall be subject to it. Do not subject them to the penalties of this bill, penalties of $5,000 for a violation of it. Do not impose that upon every man who uses his own vessel, large or small, to transport freight upon the rivers or the lakes or the sounds or the bays of the United States from place to place, because it had been transported by a railroad company to the place where he reached it, or because it might in a continuous carriage be transported by a railroad company from the place where he delivered it.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask a question. I see what the Senator is seeking to get at, and I appreciate that by the terms of his amendment he wants to take out from the operation of this bill all that great interior lake navigation and river navigation that is not operated, to use his language, "under a common control, management, or arrangement"—those are the exact words—with a railroad. Now, I want to ask the Senator whether there is any difficulty in making the application of this rule as he has laid it down? What would be construed as a common control or management or arrangement? Suppose, for instance, that the railroad makes no control or arrangement or management from year to year or from month to month, but that by the terms of a particular contract it only applies to a specific cargo, to a specific freight for the time being, for only that once, would that be a common control, management, or arrangement? Because if it would not, and it is desirable to take these lines of lake steamers and river steamers out of this bill, it would be easy enough to avoid what might seem to be carried by the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, by making no common control, management, or arrangement, but only letting it appear as if it was a contract for the time being, as though the vessel itself went independent, without regard to the road, and took up the freight and carried it and transferred it to another point where the railroad came in. Does not the Senator see that there might be difficulty? I do not know whether it can be remedied or not, but is there not difficulty here in the application of the amendment?

Mr. CONGER. My answer to that is this: If there is no common arrangement or common control or common contract for a through rate from any point, I will say from Saint Paul to New York partly by rail and partly by water—that is, partly by the lakes—if there is no arrangement by which they carry in common for a given price for the whole, a portion by each part, rail and water—when one ships to a port on the lake and there it is subject to carriage by anything that will take it by charter-party or a contract made there, then there is no common arrangement for that through freight either as to price of carriage or anything of that kind, and there is no special arrangement either. It is to avoid bringing under the control of this bill that class of vessels—a very large class of vessels, which take freight where they can find it and carry it where they agree to as independent boats—that this amendment is offered.

I thought there could be no possible objection to this. It is not half the provision I would desire for such an amendment. I would desire that there should be a common specific contract or arrangement of carriage all the way from Saint Paul to New York, with the amount of freight defined and the ratio of freight charged on the rail and on the water, and on the rail again defined. That is done where there is a continuous through arrangement, so that the vessels become a part of the railroad line and are subject to its freight charges and its expedition and all those questions that arise.

It is the easiest thing in the world in regard to any freight, by the invoice, by the consignment, by the bill of lading, to declare that it shall be all rail to New York, or that it shall be part rail and part water, on the lakes or on the rivers. The very bill of lading itself shows what the arrangement and control is. So I have said "under a common control, management," or, to meet all possible cases, an "arrangement."

I am asked a question in regard to the evidence of it. The evidence is plain. There will be no escaping the common arrangement under this provision, the common control of the railroad and of the vessel or of the line of vessels. When they do make such an arrangement in common between the vessel carrier and the land carrier by railroad, then they do it knowingly and come under the operation of this bill that applies to both. Both know what the law is, both know where it applies; and I am perfectly willing that if a carrier by water knowingly enters into any arrangement or contract or common control with regard to that kind of freight he shall be liable to all the obligations of this bill.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator how that immense amount of commerce that is brought to one side of the lakes by railroad and taken from the other side by railroad for through transportation and which over the waters immediately is carried by steamers is generally carried. Is it by independent ships, vessels, steamers, or under some such arrangement as would be included in the words of the amendment of the Senator from Michigan? How is that done?

Mr. CONGER. I know how it is, the same on the lakes and the same on the rivers. Railroads and lines of steamboat transportation have a common contract by which they take freight and divide the receipts.

Mr. HALE. Divide the whole freight?

Mr. CONGER. Divide the whole freight. There are several lines of that kind on the great lakes where there are large shipments from points to points coming by rail and leaving by rail, as there is at Cleveland, at Erie, at Buffalo, and at Ogdensburg, within our borders from Chicago, and there are lines of steamers connecting with railroads. They always run by a common arrangement for the carriage of freight, and each gets a fixed proportion of the freight. They come under the provisions of this bill and ought to.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to that, because that connects with the railroad freight, and the lines of vessels have their management and arrangement and they enter into this agreement knowingly; but there are hundreds of ports on the lake shore where freight is received which does not come by rail. The six thousand million feet of lumber that are manufactured in the State of Michigan leave its ports where the mills are around the lakes, and they go in single vessels owned by the mill-men sometimes, chartered vessels sometimes picked up where they can, and they take this lumber freight to Chicago, the great lumber market, millions and millions of feet of it. I am speaking now of Michigan lumber and not of Wisconsin and Minnesota. It is gathered up at all the points around the lakes and shipped in a mill-owner's vessel or a hired vessel or a chartered vessel for the occasion, perhaps running all the season from the mill. All that class of vessels, because that lumber goes out of Chicago by rail, ought not to be covered by a law of this kind.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly not.

Mr. CONGER. So the friends of this bill, those who have charge of it, say it ought not to be included. Now, there is lumber shipped from Detroit to Pittsburgh. That is shipped in the harbor, on the lakes or wherever it may be, on board this same class of vessels to Erie or to any point whence it may go by canal or by rail to its point of destination. There is no reason in the world why those vessels should be liable to the pains and penalties of the bill. Until they have reached a point by a contract with one party by rail when it has been carried by water and is to be carried by rail, there is no reason why that class of vessels or common carriers should come under the provision of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CONGER. Yes.

Mr. MORRILL. Suppose where there was no contract or arrangement between the shipping companies, water and land, a case like this should occur, that the parties owning the merchandise to be shipped should make an arrangement or contract with one party to carry to a certain point for a certain rate, and when it got there the other party should have had a contract with the same parties to carry it at the same rate, and that this contract should become known and the constant usage, would the shipping parties on land and water be liable under the proposed arrangement, there being no contract whatever, only a usage?

Mr. ALLISON. They have no arrangement.

Mr. MORRILL. No arrangement whatever.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator asks a question as he might in regard to evidence. If this arrangement of carrying part of the way with one carrier and then a new contract carrying part of the way with another carrier is in fraud of the law, when that can be proved the law will attach. No man can escape the provisions of law by a pretended arrangement.

Mr. MORRILL. But the constant practice all over the country now is that if you have anything you want to ship you mark on it the destination and by way of certain communications of this railroad and that and by water communication. The bill of lading goes without transfer to the person, and at the end he charges it to the whole route; it is charged over to the last party who has any control over it. That is the constant practice all over the country.

Mr. CONGER. That is a contract of shipping from the point of departure to the extreme end of the route.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no contract about it.

Mr. CONGER. I say that is virtually a contract from the point of departure to the through end of the route. The contractors at one end agree to lay down this freight in New York from Saint Paul or from Kansas City, or wherever it may be sent from, at a certain price. The contract may take either course. If it says partly by rail and partly by water, the price is agreed upon and with expedition the freight must go on, the road taking the responsibility for its through freight to New York. There must be a contract or arrangement running with that freight on through, whether it is on another railroad or whether it is on a vessel. There must be a contract of expedition, of charging of the freightage, whether it is written out in full or not. Therefore I put in the words, "common control, common management, or arrangement," so that there can be no objection at all that it should come under some head by which these vessels should be made liable and in law would be held liable to the provision of the bill after having made their arrangements and joined in a common management, or common control, or common arrangement.

I think that is fair. I think it embraces everything which the friends of the bill ought to ask, and it certainly means no more. It is in a modified form what I have been willing to give and what the friends of the bill have declared would be the effect without it. I do not think it can have the effect without it, and therefore I want the provision inserted.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It seems to me that the bill as reported by the committee upon a line of water transportation would embrace all kinds of traffic, whether part of a continuous line of transportation or not. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan limits the effect of the law, I think, to vessels which run in connection with some line of transportation by rail. I am willing to give all the competition by water that I can, and as the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan does leave room for competition on the lakes, on the rivers, and wherever there is transportation by water, I shall vote for his amendment. But if I could vote to exclude all vessels, whether running in connection with a line of transportation by rail or not, I should do that. That would suit me better; but as I can not get that I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, which does give competition by independent vessels upon all navigable waters and lines of boats running in connection with railroads. It is that much less to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear the amendment read so that I may understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 6, after the word "used," it is moved to insert the words "under a common control, management, or arrangement;" so as to read:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory of the United States, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, &c.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, it strikes me that the amendment is a good one, because on the public water ways of the United States any individual man has a right to put his own boat, haul his own freight, and if he can not get it from railroads that carry partly by rail and partly by water, I think as far as the quantity is concerned he can act on his own responsibility and take the chances. He will not be able to do it in all cases, but he has the right to do it. As we are providing only, as I understand, for common carriers either by rail exclusively or by rail and water as a part of a continuous line for the time being at least, I think it would be well for us to leave out that class of persons who are not acting as corporations, who are not acting under the authority of the United States or the States in carrying on commerce between the States, and we should allow the individual man not connected with any organization to which corporate rights have been given to manage his water communication to suit himself, if he can. I do not know that he can, but it strikes me that there will be no harm in the amendment.

I know that last year, and I see again this year, the struggle has been, and is now, and will continue to be, between those of us who believe that it is the duty of the United States in regard to interstate commerce to take control over the great common carriers of the country and those who do not believe that we have a right to do so or that we ought to interfere with them at all. The States in regard to State commerce have assumed that right, and the Supreme Court has decided that they had a right to do it.

Since the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] was adopted the other day we find all sorts of amendments, not intended, for I have no right to assume that any Senator intends anything that his amendment does not purport, but obviously having the effect of breaking down the bill, for many gentlemen perhaps desire no legislation at all. For instance, an amendment was offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] the other day and adopted. The remark was made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] "that is right," as the RECORD shows, and the amendment was agreed to, adding the words "of the like class and quantity of," so as to make the fourth section read:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge more or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of the like class and quantity of property subject to the provisions of this act for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction.

Quantity! They might, as they have done in times gone by, charge, as I have shown they did, $300 a car from Omaha to San Francisco and $800 from Omaha to Reno. But if they could show that there was half a bushel more grain, not to say a car-load more, going through to San Francisco than there was in that to Reno, they would have a right to charge the $800 to Reno, and nobody could prove and no shipper could tell whether it was the same quantity.

The Senator from Rhode Island of course did not mean that; but if he had consulted the railroad magnates, who did not intend to break up that practice, for the cunningest device which by any possibility could be devised to make the provision nugatory, he could not have done it more effectively. They tried that last year, but they did not dare to go as far as this amendment goes, because the same quantity settles the whole question, and there can be no punishment to a railroad company if they can prove that one shipment had a car-load more or a bushel more than the one they were charging $800 for, and pretend that they were not making an unjust discrimination.

The amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], which looks very plausible, is not much better, and it came from a gentleman who has opposed all efforts at taking control of railroads, as far as I can now recall his votes. Indeed his amendment was so plain that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] when he came to speak of it in his speech, in which he charged all of us with acting against the interests of the farmer who dared to say that a charge of $300 from Omaha to San Francisco and a charge of $800 to Virginia City, 700 miles shorter on the same train and hauling the same produce in the same car was an unjust discrimination, had to say, as I read from the RECORD in his speech:

The Senator from Iowa saw this difficulty, and he proposes, by an amendment that everybody can see is impossible to be effectuated, to prevent them from charging as much even for a short haul as for a long haul.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas. I would consider it impossible to be effective. The result would perhaps be no legislation. That suits the railroads.

The amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island absolutely destroys the possibility of making the bill of any value; but it seems that the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], myself, and a number of others have turned out now to be railroad agents to break down the great shippers of the West and to prevent them from getting their corn, their wheat, their hogs, their everything to market, and that we have become now absolute lobbyists for railroads! That seems to be the presentation of this case now.

As to the water ways, last year, when the argument was up and Mr. Albert Fink was brought before the Committee on Education and Labor, as reported in volume 2 of the labor and capital investigation of that committee, part 1, page 496, which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] laid before us, Mr. Fink had to agree that the water ways were not in a position to combine or do anything as railroads do. This is a part of his testimony:

Q. The water ways among themselves are unable to combine?

A. There is no inducement for water ways to combine. They are never competitors in the sense in which railroads are. For example, the Erie Canal is not a competitor with the Mississippi River; that is to say, not an immediate competitor. They are competitors in a certain sense, as for the export business; but they do not come into direct competition with each other. For example, the Hudson River runs through a certain section of country. There are only certain people that can be furnished with accommodations by the Hudson River. But with the railroads it is different; the railroads cross each other in every direction. The rivers do not. The net-work of railroads makes competition very active; one road competes with many others. There is no competition between the several water ways; there is only competition between the boats on each water way; but the railways compete with each other all over the country and in every direction. This makes railroad competition so much more widespread, leading to so many complications that it makes it difficult to prevent competition from becoming ruinous.

Therefore it seems to me in presenting this bill and seeking for the first time to assert our authority to regulate commerce that it is well enough to confine ourselves to dealing with those great lines, the railway lines and the water ways that they have control of, or the boats and other things they use as part of their systems, and to allow the people who are not a part of them nor connected with them to remain until we are further advised.

It is assumed now in the argument that the railroads do hauling cheaper, that is, from the extreme West—Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, and elsewhere—than they would if any control was taken from them to regulate intermediate rates. I suppose every man in this country knows that there is not a pound of freight hauled from the most remote point in the West one penny a ton cheaper than competition requires it to be hauled. That condition will remain as well after the passage of this bill as now, because the existing competition that brings it down to the present point will hold it there.

I have never been disposed to go very far in the direction of cheapening the short haul, not further than the proposition I made last year, which I believe is perfectly safe, that the charge which is made by the railroad for the whole haul over the whole length of line shall be the maximum charge that shall be made for a haul over any part of it. That would not cripple anybody, nor injure anybody; but, as I illustrated in three cases that I have in my mind now, a railroad should not charge from the Pennsylvania mines to Baltimore $1.50 a ton for coal, and charge $2.50, if you please, to drop that same ton of coal at York, 60 miles short of Baltimore, on the same line of road. Nor should the Pacific railroads charge $300 a car-load from Omaha to San Francisco and $800 on the same line of road, in the same car similarly loaded, to Virginia City, with 800 miles less haul. Nor should the railroad from Memphis to New Orleans haul for $1 a bale, and charge $3 a bale from Winona, Miss., 120 miles nearer New Orleans on the same line for the same bale. If they are authorized to charge as much for any part of the way as they do for the haul over the whole line, that ought to be satisfactory to them.

Mr. BROWN. The honorable Senator from Kentucky has repeated on several occasions here the proposition which I find in his speech delivered on the 27th of last month and which he now repeats again, that no railroad should charge for hauling over a part of its line more than it charges for hauling over the whole length of the line. That seems to be his panacea for all the evils in railroading, as I understand, or at least the best that can be done.

If he will allow me to call his attention for a moment to how that will operate, I think he will see that it would not be effective at all in being of any service to the country. This is like all other legislation where we undertake to regulate commerce or to regulate anything that is so large that it is out of our reach or the operation of which people can not well understand.

Take as an illustration a shipment made from Saint Louis, Mo., to Macon, Ga. I will suppose that the rate charged on a car-load of bacon from Saint Louis to Macon is $50. If I understand the Senator's proposition, the railroad company or the transportation company should be permitted to charge $50, the maximum rate for the whole length of the line, to any intermediate point, but not to charge more than that at any intermediate point. That must be the maximum for any point, as it is the maximum for the whole length of the line.

Now, let us see how that would operate as a remedy. Suppose the railroads undertake to do that, if the law allows them to do it, and so the charge is made from Saint Louis to Macon. The railroad companies, if they choose in that case, without violating their rule, could dry up Louisville, and the trade going in the Senator's own State, because they could discriminate against it to any extent they might choose. There could be no remedy for the existing evil and it would make matters worse. For instance, they would charge on a car-load of bacon in the case I have already supposed $50 from Saint Louis to Macon. They might charge only $10 to Evansville, $50 to Louisville, and $15 to Nashville. They would then give to the competing city on each side of Louisville a very large and dangerous advantage. They might then charge $50 to Chattanooga, $20 to Atlanta, and $50 to Macon, if not restrained.

Mr. BECK. Under existing conditions, if their maximum charge from Saint Louis to Atlanta is $50, as the law now stands they can charge Louisville $150 for the same thing, and they may charge each intermediate city not only $150, but $500, for what they are charging $50 for. If there is no way of getting the freight from Louisville or these intermediate points unless it pays the $150 or the $500, when they are hauling the same freight from Saint Louis through to Atlanta at the lower rate, I should like to know from the Senator from Georgia whether we are not improving the condition a good deal and limiting their powers a good deal by the bill when we say, "You shall not charge $150, but $50 shall be your maximum?" I should like to have the Senator's answer to that, with all his imaginary cases.

Mr. BROWN. It is no imaginary case.

Mr. BECK. It is a fact that they can charge to-day $50 from Saint Louis to Atlanta and $150 from Saint Louis to Louisville.

Mr. BROWN. No; they can not do that.

Mr. BECK. Why can they not?

Mr. BROWN. Because competition makes it absolutely impossible.

Mr. BECK. But I am speaking of such a case as was cited on the Union and Central Pacific Railroads running from Omaha to San Francisco through Reno and Virginia City, where there was no competition. I will not name any particular place, but take any point on the road where the freight has to rot, whether it is wheat or cotton, unless it is removed by the railroad. I ask whether they can not charge three times as much as they do from Winona to New Orleans on cotton now as against Memphis, and if the limitation we propose, to bring it down so as not to exceed the rate charged for the through rate, is not a great deal better than the existing condition of things? I ask whether it does not assert the principle that Congress has at last determined that we will take control over you, and if you insist after we have taken control upon making these unjust discriminations and exactions because of your power and authority, having taken control over you we will progress until we see that you shall not perpetrate the gross injustice you have been doing in times gone by. It may be a question whether the Senator from Georgia is not making the fight now against any and all control by Congress over railroads engaged in interstate commerce so as to make possible the miserable conditions which have existed in years gone by.

Mr. BROWN. I will state, if the Senator will allow me one moment, that without the Camden amendment I would vote for the bill.

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt that the bill in any form recognizing the power of Congress is an improvement on the present condition, and I shall vote for it with or without the Camden amendment, if for no other purpose than to assert our authority and to give warning to these corporations that interstate commerce is as much under the control of the Congress of the United States, by virtue of our constitutional power, as State commerce is, under the decision of the Supreme Court on what is known as the Granger law, under the control of the States.

That is a great step gained; and I shall vote for the bill in any shape hoping to do better in the future; but the moment the Camden amendment was introduced, and it was not so much because of any harm it might do, though I admit it goes a little further than I would care to go, these other amendments were offered. The amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island makes of itself an impossibility of the bill providing for the transportation of property of like quantity when no shipper can know anything about the quantity. I thought when it was read the other day that it was "of like quality." I thought it meant wheat, hogs, cattle, sheep; the same thing, the general quality. It never entered my head that any Senator on this floor would talk about "like quantity," to make us measure down to a bushel on a car-load.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. I will, and I should be glad to hear what "like quantity" means.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is the Senator from Kentucky familiar with the legislation of the various States on this subject? The language which I used is identically the language of the Massachusetts statute, and, so far as I know, of all the other State statutes where States have legislated upon the matter with intelligence.

Mr. BECK. Take a car that was charged $300 from Omaha to San Francisco, coming back to a case that we all know existed. Suppose the car contained 5,000 bushels of wheat. We are not likely to ship wheat West, but it is a good illustration. Suppose a car going to Reno contained 4,000 bushels. I ask the Senator if when the railroad was charged with having made a discrimination the company could show there were 5,000 bushels in one and 4,000 bushels in the other and the like quantity did not exist, whether that would not be a defense in law?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think there ought to be any trouble in understanding what the words "like quantity" mean in such cases.

Mr. BECK. Recollect I speak of the car-load, the unit being a car-load. I do not mean packages.

Mr. ALDRICH. I take it for granted that 4,000 pounds or 5,000 pounds would be a like quantity. "Like" does not mean "identical;" it does not mean "the same;" it means "like quantity" in railroad parlance. There never has been any trouble in understanding the law. It does not mean that a man shall pay the same for carrying 10,000 pounds that he pays for 1 pound. That construction was liable to be placed upon the measure in the position in which it stood. I think that all legislators everywhere have recognized the principle which the amendment seeks to effectuate, that a railroad company has the undoubted right, as everybody has, to charge less for carrying a larger quantity in proportion than it does for a small quantity.

Mr. BECK. I speak of the car-load always as the unit. I do not mean a package, or to stop at a railroad station and take on a bundle. When the Senator said "of like class and quantity of property" he may not have meant it, but the men who suggested that amendment meant to get clear of any liability for a violation of law when they could show that there was any difference in the quantity contained in the cars that were being hauled in which there was $800 charged for a shorter distance when there was $300 charged for going 700 or 800 miles farther.

So with regard to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. While he opposed the Camden amendment altogether, as I said the other day he out-Heroded Herod, and went back to make it absurd as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] very properly suggested. If we are going to do anything, we are endeavoring to pass a sensible law. Let it be just to the railroad and just to the people, but firmly and peremptorily advise the railroads that the extreme cases of injustice which have been perpetrated heretofore shall not be allowed. I gave three instances, and might have given thirty; but the three were as good as the thirty. Let us say to the Union Pacific Railroad, "Hereafter you shall not charge $800 to Virginia City and $300 to San Francisco when you start from Omaha;" and to another company, "You shall not charge a dollar a ton more to leave coal at York than you do for hauling it 60 miles farther to Baltimore on the same train of cars;" and to another, "You shall not charge $3 for a bale of cotton from Winona, on the line from Memphis to New Orleans, when you charge only $1 from Memphis to New Orleans." That much done, a great step forward will have been taken. Other things can be regulated afterward.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to call attention to the fact that instead of providing that they shall not charge $300 to Virginia City and $150 to San Francisco, the bill provides affirmatively that if they charge $300 to Virginia City they shall not charge less than $300 to San Francisco. That is the provision of the bill with the Camden amendment.

Mr. BECK. Why should they?

Mr. McMILLAN. The provision of the bill is that they shall not charge less for a long haul than for a short one. If they charge $300 to Virginia City the bill places a minimum upon San Francisco, and they shall not charge less than they do to Virginia City. That is the provision here, and it is an affirmative provision. You place a minimum limitation upon the through charge. That is the effect of it affirmatively.

Mr. BECK. The terminal point, as every one knows, is controlled by competition; and a charge of a penny a ton more would take it on some other line and will continue to do it, whether this bill passes or not; so that all the scarecrows which have been raised about the wheat of the West and the pork and the beef of the West not being moved hereafter in case we prevent extortion along the line may just as well be dismissed. But for the competition they have now it would not be one penny less than they could get for it, and that condition of things will always exist.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply wish to appeal to the Senator to speak to the amendment before the Senate. We are thrashing this straw over and over again by discussing amendments which have been acted upon, and I should be very glad if Senators would confine their remarks as nearly as practicable to the particular amendment before the Senate, so that we may get on with the bill and have it disposed of.

Mr. BECK. I will only add that although I am charged so often with talking too much, I have not done it on this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly not.

Mr. BECK. I shall support the amendment of the Senator from Michigan for the reasons I have in part given, and I shall accommodate the Senator from Illinois by endeavoring to say as little more as possible.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will not take my suggestion at all personal.

Mr. BECK. No, I do not; I take it very kindly, because I desire to have the bill finished myself.

Mr. CULLOM. Unless we confine ourselves to the particular question before the Senate we shall never get through with the bill. I am very anxious, as I know the Senator is, to pass a bill, and as good a one as is possible for the public benefit.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CULLOM. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The frankness of the Senator from Kentucky is pleasing and refreshing. His courage is admirable as he has presented it to us here this afternoon. He is the champion of the down-trodden people in opposition to the wrongs imposed upon them by the railway monopolies. Yet he announces in effect that he is in favor of passing an act by Congress which shall authorize railroad companies to charge as much for a haul of 100 miles as for a haul of 2,000 miles.

Mr. BECK. Have they not got that right now?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No, sir. The rule of law applicable to common carriers provides that the charge must be a reasonable one.

Mr. BECK. Then how did they charge $800 to Virginia City and $300 to San Francisco on the same line?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Not now. Any citizen who is charged as great a sum for a hundred-mile haul as for 2,000 miles has his right under the law applicable to common carriers to test the reasonableness of that in the courts. But the bill proposes a remedy different from that, not depriving the citizen of his right to contest himself if he sees proper, but supplementing that by governmental action also.

The Senator from Kentucky says that we should pass a bill which will legalize the charge of as much for a haul of 100 miles as for a haul of 2,000 miles, and complains that we have not been doing right to the interests of the people, and that we are enforcing, supporting, making perpetual the wrongs imposed through this system by the railway carriers upon the people.

It is useless for the Senator from Kentucky to attempt to run away from the position in which he has placed himself. The amendment which I offered and against which he lodges his complaint simply declares that nothing in the fourth section shall be so construed as to authorize the carrier to charge as much for a shorter as for a longer haul. The Senator from Kentucky says that is wrong. Strike that amendment out of the bill and let it stand as it would under those conditions, and you pass a law under which necessarily the implication arises that for 100 or even for 10 miles as much may be charged as for 1,000 or 2,000 miles, because it will not be any more, it will be only as much.

Mr. BECK. I do not desire the Senator from Iowa to put on the record any misrepresentation of my position, and I do not say that he tries to do it. I do not propose to legalize the right of the railroads to charge for 100 miles as much as for 1,000 miles, nor do I intend to legalize any act of extortion, of discrimination, or of drawbacks, giving advantages to one set of shippers over another. I seek to strike down by this law the outrageous extortions which past experience has shown they have exacted, and to make it impossible to charge more for a haul over any part of their line than they do for a haul over the whole length of it.

But without legalizing that, after making it impossible to charge three times as much for a haul over part of the line as for a haul over the whole of it, or ten times as much, as they have been exacting, I narrow them down to the point and assume the jurisdiction of Congress to say it is impossible. I do not legalize any exaction, any discrimination, any combination whereby they shall have the legal right to charge as much for 10, 20, 100, or 500 miles as they do for 1,000 miles. I leave that to the condition that the Senator from Iowa has shown no court would recognize, after we have once taken jurisdiction over them and brought them within the authority of our courts. The struggle has been for years to prevent the passage of any act of Congress which would bring them within the jurisdiction of our courts. We never have had any law passed by the Congress of the United States which would prevent the extortions to which I have called attention, that from Omaha to Reno for $700 or $800, as proven by official papers time and again when hauls were made to San Francisco for $300. We have had no law to bring railroad companies making such exactions before the courts of the country.

I propose to strike that down now by law, and to leave every other question open to the courts of the country, and to pass a law here which will make them subject to judicial decision and to judicial action. That is what I am proposing; and while I do not propose to go to such a length as to prevent the bill from passing by making propositions under which it can be argued that there will be injustice done in many instances, where it was an uphill haul, or an out of the way haul, or where locomotives had to be doubled or trebled to overcome obstacles on some particular line of road and therefore that it may be a just cause of complaint, I propose to strike down the extreme evil and to leave the others for the action of the courts, and at the same time to pass a law, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] has very well suggested, which brings them within our jurisdiction and let them understand that they must submit to it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Kentucky can not get away from the position he has assumed by any such statement as he has just made. He says he is in favor of passing a law for the control of these carrier companies. So am I. But he says it is wrong to pass a law which shall have my amendment in it, which simply declares that the provision shall not be so construed as to authorize the carrier to charge as much for a short as for a long haul. The Senator from Kentucky must know full well that the law as it now stands with reference to carriers is more liberal toward the shipper than the rule which he desires to put into the statute, that of declaring they shall not charge any more for a shorter than for a longer haul. He is willing they may do that. He is willing to have an act passed which by implication will declare to them they may do that; and he is unwilling to let it be passed with the declaration that it shall not be so construed as to authorize the charge of a greater sum for the shorter than for the longer haul.

Mr. BECK. Now one word more, and I am done. I am not seeking to get away from anything, nor am I desiring to evade any question. I sought to strike down the extreme wrong, leaving the others to a commission, limiting it to the point that the maximum haul over the whole road should control, and not three times as much be charged, as in many instances, for shorter hauls. When that proposition was made the Senator from Iowa, true to all his past votes, voted against it. If when the Senator from West Virginia made that proposition the Senator from Iowa desired in good faith to stand by those who sought to curtail the power of the railroads in their gross exactions, he would have voted with those of us who did. But after endeavoring to defeat it, and to leave the present condition of things existing unless it began at the end of the line (and I do not know how he would have voted then), he now comes in with an amendment which even the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], as I read a little while ago and will read again for his edification, has construed to mean nothing, and I suppose a majority of the gentlemen who want no legislation will assume that the Senator from Kansas was right when he said:

The Senator from Iowa saw this difficulty, and he proposes, by an amendment that everybody can see is impossible to be effectuated, to prevent them from chargng as much even for a short haul as for a long haul.

The amendment may be in good faith, I do not question anybody's good faith; but for a Senator who had voted against the Camden amendment then to come in with this and put it in a shape where even the Senator from Kansas thought was so plain that everybody could see that it was impossible to be effectuated, it may operate without his intending it to defeat the bill altogether, which I know would be agreeable to a very large number of distinguished gentlemen.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I can not let the Senator from Kentucky get away yet. He was in the Senate when I made suggestions relative to several amendments. When the Camden amendment (so called) was pending, I stated that if that amendment should not be adopted I would move an amendment in line 6 of section 4, after the word "departure," to insert the words "or to the same point of destination," so that all shipments from the common point of departure or picked up at any point on the line and going to the same point of destination, should come within its provisions. I suggested that amendment for the purpose of making it uniform and putting it in better condition than the section now stands.

But the Senator from Kentucky was not willing that that should be done. He was so anxious to have a law passed by which a charge for 100 miles might be as great as for a thousand that he was not willing to have that done.

Now, he falls back upon the remarks of the Senator from Kansas and applies them to my position. The Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Kentucky are by no means running in pairs upon this subject, and I do not see why he applies that to me, for certainly I was not in harmony with the views suggested by the Senator from Kansas when I offered the amendment.

Instead of desiring to defeat legislation upon this subject, for years I have been in favor of enacting effective legislation, and therefore I offered the amendment which is the ground of complaint on the part of the Senator from Kentucky. I am willing to stand by that; and I doubt whether his courage will last him through many years in standing by his declaration that an act of Congress should authorize the carriers of this country to charge as much for a hundred as for a thousand miles.

Mr. BECK. The only answer I make to that is that there is no foundation for the statement made by the Senator from Iowa. I would enact no law for any such purpose or any such intent, and he may repeat it and reiterate it as much as he pleases. I meet it with a flat contradiction, that there is not a word of truth in the suggestion. I am for cutting off bad practices, and not legalizing anything.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator can not avoid the logical inference, however.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not propose to continue the discussion upon the amendment offered by myself several days ago and adopted by the Senate; but I desire to say to the Senator from Kentucky that this insinuation that that amendment was offered at the suggestion or request of any interested party is unworthy of him. Whenever that amendment is before the Senate, I shall be prepared to discuss it upon its merits.

I am somewhat surprised that the friends of the principle incorporated in the fourth section, the provision as amended by the Senator from West Virginia, are unwilling to apply it to all the commerce of the country, or that they should seek to relieve a portion of that commerce from its beneficent influences.

The amendment now offered by the Senator from Michigan, and which the Senator from Kentucky announces that he will support, proposes to relieve from the provisions of that section all steam-vessels which are not running under a joint control or management or by an arrangement in connection with railroads. All steamers running in connection with railroads or by an arrangement with railroads, or carrying the commerce and produce of the West in connection with railroads, are brought under the terms and the provisions of the fourth section. In other words, such steamers can not charge a larger sum for carrying wheat from Duluth to Detroit than from Duluth to Buffalo. But a certain other class of steamers denominated by the Senator from Michigan independent steamers, tramps, as has been well suggested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], not under any regular management, not running in any regular line, are exempted, and may charge for carrying wheat from Duluth to Detroit twice as much as they do from Duluth to Buffalo.

If the principle is a sound one, if it should be applied to the railroads of this country, to a portion of the interstate commerce of the country, why do gentlemen ask that you shall apply it to regular lines and not to these independent steamers carrying freight down our lakes without any regular control?

If you pass the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, how long will it take the great steam lines running down our lakes to dissolve their connection and arrangements with the railroad lines?

The amendment is intended to exempt the lake commerce from the arbitrary provisions and restrictions of the bill, and I am not surprised at intelligent gentlemen looking after the interests of their own constituency situated upon the lakes who desire that those restrictions should not apply to their own commerce. It is not surprising that such gentlemen favor the amendment; but it seems to me that to be consistent they should have a certain amount of regard for the interests of other States and of other sections, of the interior of the country, of people who are not situated at any of the lake ports.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Kentucky, when the former discussion was going on in the Senate over a like bill, referred to two noted outrages in transportation. One was the discrimination made in the price of transporting cotton from Winona, Miss., and from Memphis, Tenn., to New Orleans. The other was a complaint as to the injustice done on the Union and Central Pacific Railroads in charging from a starting-point on the road $800 a car-load to Virginia City and $300 only to San Francisco. I do not understand the nature of that transportation, and therefore I can say nothing in reference to that particular business.

Mr. STANFORD. If the Senator will allow me, I can explain that.

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. STANFORD. Mr. President, I heard what the Senator from Kentucky said in regard to the freight from Omaha to Reno and from Omaha to San Francisco. In order to properly understand the matter it would be well to remind the Senate that freight going from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast has but two competing points, that is, the place of beginning and the place of ending. Iron and steel go into the hold of a vessel from New York to San Francisco for $5 a ton. The freight also has another way of going to that place, and that is by the isthmus, where freight generally goes at from ten to twenty dollars a ton. The railroads have to meet the competition with the water carriage between the two extreme points—that is, from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast—and it is a question with them whether they shall meet the competition, whether they shall work for a small profit or whether they shall despise the small profit.

This whole bill really is a question of competion, whether railroads shall, at competing points, meet competition; whether, when they can not accept a full rate, they shall take the best rate possible. That is really the question involved.

As to the particular case of Reno freight, in going to San Francisco, perhaps over the line of railroads from Erie to Chicago sometimes at half the rate that is paid by the Chicago merchant for the same freight on the same train, and so also from Chicago to Omaha and from Omaha to Salt Lake, it is moved necessarily at a very small profit, and the railroad company between New York and Chicago is willing to accept that extremely low profit if by chance they might have the fair profit that they usually charge between New York and Chicago. So they recognize San Francisco as a competing point. They recognize some interior places, such as Sacramento, San José, Stockton, and Marysville, as competing points, but not farther east than that.

Now, the man at Reno to whom the Senator from Kentucky seemed to refer with so much gusto takes advantage of the railroads between here and Ogden, and he says to them, "I want to ship my freight to San Francisco." He delivers it and it is way-billed and shipped accordingly. When the freight has reached San Francisco, where the carrier has honestly and faithfully carried it according to the contract, he says to the company there, "It may be a portion of this I want to ship to Portland, a portion down into New Mexico, another portion, or it may be the whole I want to ship to Reno." The railroad company of course is bound to take it.

The shipper has had the advantage of competition with the water route and has been able to have his freight delivered to him at Reno at less than the sum of the regular rates from New York to Reno, and he has taken advantage of the carrier instead of the carrier having taken advantage of him. He has paid no more than everybody else does for the same business all the way through. That is the explanation; and it is a question here whether the railroad company shall be permitted to meet competition and to accept the very lowest profit or not. That is the real question. If it were not for interrupting the Senator from Georgia I might say something further about the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, go on.

Mr. STANFORD. Under the bill the traffic between China and Japan which comes over here must necessarily be given up, because it is in competition with the Suez Canal route, and the agents of the companies there meet the competition, whatever it may be in those cities, and fix the price accordingly. The consequence is that teas, silks, and other things which come across and go to Chicago, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, and to New York must come, and will come oftentimes, at lower rates than the same character of goods on the same train that moves from San Francisco to these various places.

I did not propose at this time, or indeed at any time, to discuss this whole question, but the bill is a blow at competition. You will find not only on the extreme points of the Atlantic and Pacific but in almost every county throughout the United States where there is more than one road there is competition now, and the shipper has the advantage of that competition. It is not a blow at railroads alone, but you are striking at every man with the artificial communication which the geography or topography of the country has determined to him. You say to those shippers, "You shall not avail yourselves of the natural or artificial advantages of competition." That is what the bill says.

I am much obliged to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky for a moment before I go on with other propositions, if he prefers to be heard now.

Mr. BECK. I only want about five minutes. The statement of the Senator from California illustrates exactly the system as I understand it. There is competition from New York to San Francisco and there always will be. Therefore he insists that the railroads have to haul at reasonably low rates from San Francisco in order to get any part of those freights; and he complains absolutely on the floor of the Senate that the man living at Reno or Virginia City, four, five, six, or seven hundred miles this side of San Francisco, took advantage of the railroad companies and paid his freight through to San Francisco, 700 miles beyond his home, and then paid for hauling it back. That is taking advantage of the railroad company! And he complains that I object to the man at Reno or Virginia City being compelled to pay $800 for hauling the same thing to his door that the companies have hauled 700 miles past it to San Francisco for $300. But when the man sees fit to go to San Francisco and then pays for the freight to go back two or three hundred dollars more, he is taking advantage of the railroad company!

All I propose to say is that as competition will always keep freights down from New York to San Francisco, because it can get there in some other way than by rail, the man who lives along the line of road shall not pay $800 for a 700 mile shorter haul for the same thing over the same line while the man at San Francisco pays $300 for it; but that they shall haul for him at least at a rate not exceeding what they charge for the long haul. That is said to be taking advantage of railroad companies! That is said to be taking advantage of competition and the lines that have to compete with others! The Senator from California states the case fairly when he says that those of us who intend to put not a great limitation but some reasonable limitation upon the powers of those railroads, and to say to them, "You shall not because you see fit to haul from one end of your line to the other for a given price charge double, quadruple, six, or ten times as much to a man for hauling along that same line of railroad on that same train the same class of goods, in exactly similar cars, to an intermediate point in order to make up for it," are striking a blow at the railroads! We say that is extortion which the Congress of the United States will regulate and limit, and we will limit you at least down to the point where the through haul shall be the maximum charge. That is unreasonable, unjust, and unfair we are told. It might be very unfair to charge half as much, and we may hereafter be able to stop them from charging half or one-fourth as much and bring them to reasonable rates all the way; but for the time being, cutting off the very thing it is admitted by the Senator from California is a great step in the right direction is perhaps as far as we can properly go without having it questioned.

I desire to say to the Senator from Rhode Island while I am up that if I said he was influenced by anybody in offering the amendment I certainly made a great mistake in my language. I know that last year men came here, and the record shows it, and endeavored to get all sorts of amendments of that kind for the purpose of breaking up the measure, and suggestions were made to me and to other Senators looking in that same direction, and arguments were made about the different character of goods and different quantities.

Mr. CAMDEN. And quality.

Mr. BECK. And quality. I was thinking of quality instead of quantity when I heard the amendment read the other day, and my friend from West Virginia who sat by my side at the time, when I asked him the question, said it was quality, and he let it pass and so did I, because we thought it meant quality instead of quantity, until we saw the RECORD afterward. I do not reflect upon the motives of Senators, and the last man in the Senate upon whose motives I would think of reflecting would be the Senator from Rhode Island. I desire to assure him of that; and if I said something I ought not to have said I assure the Senator I was arguing the question and not the motive of the mover of the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment to ask a question of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Kentucky inform us where he gets his authority for the incident which he has spoken of here so many times as to the charge on the railroad from Reno to San Francisco? It is taken from some testimony, I understand.

Mr. BECK. I can produce one of the most elaborate speeches made in the other end of this Capitol, I think by Mr. Daggett, containing all the tables and all the facts—I will bring it in the morning, or perhaps I can find it in an hour—one of the most elaborate speeches I ever heard made, and the truth of it was acquiesced in, I understand, by everybody. I think the fact on this point was repeated by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR].

Mr. PLATT. I merely asked for information.

Mr. BECK. One word further. Attention was called to it on this floor by the then Senator from Oregon [Mr. Slater], though not perhaps with as much detail as by Mr. Daggett, but going over a great deal of the same ground.

Mr. PLATT. Was it a case where the same class of freight was hauled?

Mr. BECK. The same class of freight and both by car-loads. If I have been misled in that, I have been misled by gentlemen who I supposed knew the facts.

Mr. STANFORD. One word further by way of explanation.

It is generally supposed that a man at Reno who wants his goods transported ships them to San Francisco. They are billed through to San Francisco, and then he ships them by another bill of lading from San Francisco to Reno. If he said he wanted them at Reno they would always be delivered there; but in that case, as the roads on this side do not recognize Reno as a competing point, it being nearly 300 miles inland from the ocean——

Mr. BECK. Virginia City is 700 miles, and Reno three or four hundred.

Mr. STANFORD. Virginia City is only 30 or 40 miles from Reno.

Mr. BECK. Then I have it wrong.

Mr. STANFORD. If he shipped goods to Reno he would pay the same rate that the Chicago man pays on the same goods between New York and Chicago, or he would pay the same as the Omaha man pays between New York and Omaha, or he would pay the same rates from New York to Ogden that the Ogden merchant pays; and the rule by which the way-bill would be made out would be to take the regular rate from here to Ogden and add the local rate from Ogden to Reno, or whatever point in Nevada might be the point of shipment. They have a schedule by which to make up the regular rates without asking the different companies.

The Reno man is not so far back in the interior but what he is able to avail himself of the competition which the water gives to the people at San Francisco. For instance, freight is moved from Chicago at $20 a ton. On account of competition by water at San Francisco the same kind of freight may move over the road from New York to Chicago at $10 a ton. Naturally the roads on this side are unwilling that anything should move at this low rate if it is possible for them to prevent it. So they only allow the company on the other side to regard certain points as competing points, and to make the low price to meet that competition. The railroad on the other side would like to regard Reno as a competing point.

But to show you further how far the effect of competition goes, the people of Salt Lake oftentimes have the benefit of that and they very frequently ship goods from Salt Lake to New York to go around by Cape Horn in preference to sending them by rail.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from California, if it is convenient for him to give the information, what is the difference between the rate paid by the shipper from the city of New York to the city of San Francisco, and the man who ships from the city of New York to Reno—about what would be the difference?

Mr. STANFORD. If he ships through to San Francisco?

Mr. HARRIS. I speak of direct shipments from New York, one shipment to Reno and another shipper shipping to San Francisco the same character of freight?

Mr. STANFORD. I am not able to give the rate. It would depend, of course, very much on the class of goods.

Mr. HARRIS. Would it be two or three times as much to Reno as to San Francisco?

Mr. STANFORD. I should think about twice as much on some classes of goods.

Mr. HARRIS. I speak of the same class of goods shipped in both instances.

Mr. STANFORD. There is no doubt that San Francisco's location has oftentimes compelled the railroads—for the railroads do not fix the price of transportation—to allow transportation at very low rates. It is particularly so on the railroads on the Pacific side, or they would have to refuse business. That is the rule that prevails there, and it prevails, I have no doubt, with nearly all the railroads of the United States. It is because of that fact that the great commodities of the country are moved by railroad. It is not that local rates are charged more, but because competition fixes the price of through rates. If a railroad has but very little competition the value of moving commodities is determined by the cost of the service. In my State the rule established by law at one time allowed a certain amount per ton per mile on all products and goods. Those goods had to pass over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, 7,000 feet in about 90 miles, where the cost was very great, and yet there was but 1 per cent. of the entire business that paid the maximum rate allowed by law.

The railroads in many cases I have no doubt, and I do not believe I shall err in my statement, have moved goods below the average cost of transportation per mile. Railroads not running up to their full capacity prefer to take goods at very low rates, and expect a very small profit where a larger can not be obtained because of competition or the value of the commodity moved.

The country in that manner has its development quickened. If it was demanded of the railroad companies that every ton of freight should pay its fair proportion it would stop the greater part of the business.

This bill, I imagine, is a far more serious thing than Senators generally have considered. If it is observed it means complete commercial disaster. I have no doubt of it myself.

I feel like saying a little more, but I can not trespass further on the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, but I shall decline to yield further.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understood the Senator from California to say that San Francisco has been a competitive point in traffic. I should like to know, first, which, if any part, of the railroad fixed the rates between New York and San Francisco at the point of time referred to by the Senator from Kentucky. Where was the competition then between New York and San Francisco, and who fixed the rates between New York and San Francisco then?

Mr. STANFORD. At that time there was a general schedule. There have been times when competition has been so great that the traffic agents were permitted to exercise their discretion, but ordinarily it is fixed by schedule rates.

Mr. VAN WYCK. By whom?

Mr. STANFORD. By the companies.

Mr. VAN WYCK. By the railroad managers. Then do not the railroads fix the rates between New York and San Francisco? Did they not at that time?

Mr. STANFORD. Nominally, yes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then where was the competition?

Mr. STANFORD. Competition dictated the schedule rates.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Where was the competition?

Mr. STANFORD. The competition was by water.

Mr. VAN WYCK. At that time did not the Central Pacific and Union Pacific Railroads, by the payment of a million of dollars a year, more or less, control the navigation by ocean between New York and San Francisco?

Mr. STANFORD. The great competitor was by Capé Horn, where when people are not in a hurry they can well afford to ship.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then Cape Horn was the competing point?

Mr. STANFORD. One of them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then let me renew my question. At the time spoken of by the Senator from Kentucky and when the schedule rates were fixed by the railroads, did not the principal Pacific railroads at that time control the ocean navigation—the Pacific Mail steamship line—by paying the steamship company over a million dollars a year?

Mr. STANFORD. At the particular time I do not know, but of the general fact I do know. It was to prevent a ruinous competition the railroads chartered the privilege of sending so many tons in those ships and paid them so much for it and filled them up with such kind of freight as they did not want to carry on the railroad. That is what they did. That was business, in my judgment. I justify it, and have no occasion to offer an apology to anybody for it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then the fact is, however, that the Pacific Railroads, the Central and Union Pacific, made these terms with the Pacific Mail Steamship line for the purpose of preventing competition on that route?

Mr. STANFORD. A ruinous competition.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not ask whether "ruinous" or otherwise. It was done to prevent competition.

Mr. STANFORD. I answer for myself. You put your questions. I say to prevent a ruinous competition.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That competition was checked, the ruinous part of that competition was checked by the railroad companies paying a million dollars or upward a year to the steamship line?

Mr. STANFORD. I do not think we ever paid that much.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Whatever it was. The railroad companies did not consider this competition around Cape Horn sufficiently ruinous to purchase it off?

Mr. STANFORD. That we could not interfere with.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I think the exhibition here has shown that at all events both sides of the question ought to be heard before you make up your mind. We have heard a great deal about the Reno shipments for years past in the Senate. When the explanation comes, it simply is that there has been a larger amount charged per mile on local freights than on through freights where there is ocean competition. But there is another place that has been referred to, to wit, Winona, Miss., and so often referred to in debate in both Houses that doubtless the name will become familiar. The outrage there referred to very frequently is that the railroads charged $3.25 per bale on cotton from Winona to New Orleans, while the river charges were $1 per bale from Memphis to New Orleans. That seems to need explanation.

The statement was made by a distinguished gentleman in the House of Representatives [Mr. REAGAN] on a former occasion, and one of the vice-presidents of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, a chief road in the State of Kentucky, which the Senator so ably represents, has looked into that question and fully understands it, and in an address which he made before the committee of the House of Representatives on this question he explained how that difference came to exist between the two places, and I shall ask the Secretary to read a little over two pages of Mr. Stahlman's explanation, which I think will make it very plain, and show that it is not so great an outrage as we should be led to suppose it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

But to the point. I quote from page 301, Judge REAGAN'S argument:

"We were told by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] that the railroad carries cotton from Memphis to New Orleans, 450 miles, for $1 a bale, and that they charge $3.25 a bale for hauling cotton from Winona to New Orleans, a little over 300 miles. The gentleman from Vermont says this is right, and that if the railroads are not permitted to charge more from Winona than from Memphis to New Orleans they could do no through business.

"It is plainly seen from this statement that to do a through carrying business from Memphis to New Orleans involves the necessity of compelling the people of Winona to pay a large part of the freight charges for other people from Memphis to New Orleans, or else that the charges from Winona to New Orleans are unreasonably high, and therefore unjust."

Assuming that the rates are correctly quoted, what are the facts? The cotton from Winona, Miss., carried uncompressed, loading 22 bales, at $3.25 per bale, pays $73.25 per car. The Memphis cotton, compressed, loading 55 bales, at $1 per bale, pays $55 per car. The committee will see that the discrimination is not so great after all. What more, Mr. Chairman? At Memphis the cotton is loaded by the compress company free of expense to the railroad; at Winona it is not. At Memphis shipments go forward not simply in car lots but in train loads; at Winona they go forward in small lots, even in 5 and 10 bale shipments, which, if hauled in a single car, pay less per car than the cotton from Memphis. At Memphis the railroad assumes no risk of fire, loss, or damage until the cars are loaded and delivered to the company sealed; at Winona the railroad company assumes liability the very moment the cotton touches the station platform—sometimes for days before the shipments are ordered or sent forward.

What more? The cars loaded at Memphis for New Orleans are generally returned loaded at New Orleans for Memphis with tropical fruits, sugar, molasses, rice, &c.; the Winona cars are generally returned empty. But, aside from these and other like facts, which certainly constitute important items in matters of transportation, take the bare, naked fact that the Winona people pay $3.25 per bale while the people of Memphis pay $1—is it unjust discrimination?

I presume, Mr. Chairman, it is a conceded fact that the rail lines do not make the rates on cotton from Memphis to New Orleans; that the Mississippi River steamers and barge lines do that. Suppose the rail lines withdraw from competition for Memphis cotton, will that help the Winona shipper or make the discrimination between Memphis and Winona any less? Assuredly not. The steamers and barges will continue to carry the cotton, and the rail lines must look elsewhere to make up the loss on this through traffic; and if they are not to be allowed to compete for through traffic, they must be allowed to make up their loss by an advance of their local rates, of which Winona will be obliged to stand its share.

I am not unmindful, Mr. Chairman, of the fact that it would look better to have the rates from Memphis advanced and the rates from Winona proportionably reduced; but how are you going to effect the change? The pending bill affords no such relief. It does not propose to control the rates of water lines; it practically means to force rail lines to withdraw from competition with water routes, and thus, as a matter of self-preservation, compel an advance of rail rates to and from interior and local points.

There is another feature in connection with this question which should not be lost sight of. The impression seems to prevail that these competitive rates are made to build up Memphis to the detriment of interior points. A greater mistake could not be made. Memphis is a city located on the Mississippi River, with advantages given to her by a greater Power than the Congress of the United States, which no power on earth can take away; and when railroads are asked to give interior towns the benefit of competition created for other localities by nature, it is asking something which is unreasonable and unjust.

The people of Memphis by the aid of nature's gift (the Mississippi River) have built up a city which has made property very valuable, rents and taxes high, and the general expense of doing business exorbitant. The business community, being obliged to endure this expense, have a right to demand an offset through the natural advantages given them in location. No fair-minded man will gainsay this, yet the pending bill seeks by artificial means, at the expense of private capital invested in railroads, to neutralize the natural advantages possessed by the city of Memphis. The bill in substance says: We know 50 feet of ground at Winona is worth but $50, while at Memphis, with its natural advantages, the same property is worth $20,000; yet we demand that the railroad company shall take this 50 feet of ground at Winona, put it on its cars, carry it to Memphis, and set it down fronting on Main street, so as to give the property-owner of Winona the same return upon his investment of $50 that the Memphis man can realize on $20,000 invested in like property. Was there ever a proposition more absurd? And yet this is the practical meaning of the discussion and effect of the bill. What nature has done for Memphis goes for nothing. Congress demands that the man with his private capital invested in a railroad shall, at his sacrifice and expense, do for Winona what the Creator, in his great wisdom, has done for the city of Memphis. That is the "long and short" of the "long and short haul" provision of this bill. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the proposition is ridiculously absurd, and I am amazed that intelligent men should continue to press a measure calculated to work out such ridiculous and unjust results.

Mr. BROWN. I simply had this explanation read that the Senate might see that there were two sides to the Winona case, of which so much has been said.

Mr. CAMDEN. What is that?

Mr. BROWN. An argument by Mr. Stahlman, one of the vice-presidents of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company. I am simply putting it in the RECORD to explain a matter which has been so often talked of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER], which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6 of section 1, after the word "used," it is proposed to insert:

Under a common control, management, or arrangement.

So as to read:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment from one State or Territory of the United States, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not understand the last part of that amendment as read by the Chief Clerk. I should be glad to have it read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read again.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment and the section as it would read if amended.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand it now.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 41, noes not counted.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to propose the amendment I submitted the other day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 11, line 17, to strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may;" so as to read:

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, &c.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the whole of my three amendments treated as one, and I will explain their object.

On page 11 is a provision, commencing at line 17, which as it stands in the bill provides that in case anybody who is summoned before the commission when it is making an investigation refuses to obey the subpœna of the commission, an application may be made to the circuit court and the circuit court may punish such person as for a contempt. My amendment proposes to change it in this respect, that if any person refuses to go before the commission and testify, then a court may issue an order that such person shall go before the commission and testify; and if the person refuses to obey that order, then the circuit court may punish him. There might be some technical difficulty about a court punishing for a contempt to the commission and not to the court.

I think the whole three amendments might be treated as one amendment, and then the whole clause read as it will appear if amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The three amendments will be reported as a whole.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the other two amendments be reported, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be reported in connection.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 11, line 17, to strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may;" on page 11, line 19, to strike out all after the word "act," down to and including the word "plaintiffs," in line 23, as follows:

Or, when such common carrier is a corporation, to an officer or agent thereof, or to any person connected therewith, if proceedings are instituted in the name of such commissioners as plaintiffs.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Or other person.

On page 11, line 23, to strike out all after the words "common carrier" down to and including the word "shall," in line 29, as follows:

Officer, agent, or person to show cause why such contumacy or refusal shall not be punished as and for a contempt; and if, upon hearing, the court finds that the inquiry is within the jurisdiction of the commission, and that such contumacy or refusal is willful and the same is persisted in, such contumacy or refusal shall—

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books and papers if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may.

And on page 11, line 29, after the word "punished," to strike out all down to and including the words "United States," in line 30, as follows:

As though the same had taken place in an action pending in said circuit court of the United States—

And to insert in lieu thereof:

By such court as a contempt thereof—

So as to read when amended:

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such common carrier or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books and papers if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to offer an amendment to section 5. In the printed amendment which I have offered I proposed to strike out after the word "provide," in line 26, down to and including the word "given," in line 32. I will modify the amendment from the way it is printed so as to insert in line 26 of section 5, after the word "advance," the words "or reduction;" strike out line 26, after the word "advance" and all of line 28 to the word "notice," on line 29.

The object of this amendment is to require that the same notice shall be given of a reduction in rates that is required by the bill to be given of an advance in rates, so that that part of the section shall read:

No advance or reduction in published rates, fares, charges, and classifications shall be made except after ten days' public notice.

The whole theory of the bill is to provide against discrimination, drawbacks, &c. I do not know any worse discrimination than that which is provided for in the bill, which requires that the different railroad lines shall publish their rates, which, in the combination of lines all over this country, involves an amount of clerical work that I do not believe a half dozen members of the Senate have the least possible idea of, and in the same section providing for what will result in the very worst possible kind of discrimination, a reduction without notice.

A merchant in Chicago, taking Chicago as the initial point for the transportation of grain products to the seaboard, would under this bill, taking the winter rate say of the lowest class of freight, 25 cents per 100 pounds, running down to 15 cents in the summer when the great competition of the lakes comes into play, could get a cut rate immediately on the agreement being made, immediately on the publication of rates. While the combination of figures would be to such an extent as to require an immense corps of clerks in each of the great trunk lines of railroad which had connections covering large portions of the country, that would be upset immediately by any one corporation taking the next day at lower rates without any notice.

If there is to be any stability about the rates—and I acknowledge that I am in favor generally of this bill—it will be impossible to carry out the end designed if you allow in the same breath a cut of rates which will knock all these figures into pi.

The great trouble about the transportation question is the want of stability of rates—the cutting, the giving to some favored shipper that which the general public do not get; and here you absolutely legalize that principle. A shipper at Chicago to-day who wants to send by European steamship one hundred car-loads of grain, 60,000 bushels of grain, goes to the railroad office and asks what is the rate.

The published rate is 25 cents a hundred or 15 cents a bushel in the the summer. If you allow a competitor for the same business on the very next day or on that day so that one line cuts that rate, which it could do immediately in order to get the business to 20 cents or to 15 cents, you would make a difference of from 3 to 6 cents a bushel in favor of the man who got the cut over the man who paid his 25 cents, the published rate; and when the last man got his goods to New York he would have lost 6 or more cents a bushel, which would bankrupt him in the end, for this would go on from day to day. The reduction might be made of a cent to-day and 2 cents to-morrow and so on, and 5 or 6 cents, down to a point when they got in the severest competition, to 10 cents a hundred, making a difference in the actual shipments of one man and another of many thousands of dollars.

I submit, Mr. President, that if we are going to regulate this question at all, and I think it is proper to do it, we should regulate it on a basis that there should be some rates known to the public, to the great shippers, that will last more than twenty-four hours. If it is right and proper that a notice of ten days should be given for a change to a higher rate, it is proper that it should be given for a change to a lower rate.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Suppose that this happened during the season of lake navigation, lake commerce having now been excluded from this bill—and the shipper on the lakes ships his wheat at a mere nominal rate—would it not be necessary in order that a railroad might engage in competition to have an opportunity within the period of ten days to make a change?

Mr. SEWELL. Not necessarily so unless you give the next shipper the free use of any rate. If you let the shipments by water be entirely free, then it would be necessary.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to ask a question? I understand the bill does not apply to river navigation. Take the case of a railroad running parallel with a river. You bind the hands of the railroad. It can in no case make a reduction without ten days' notice. The steamboat company running beside it may make a reduction of 25 per cent. to-day or to-morrow and take the business of the railroad.

Mr. SEWELL. I take the supposition of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] as an argument against the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER], which I trust will not remain in the bill if it is to become a law. The result of it would be not alone to affect the isolated individual owners of vessels who desire to roam untrammeled over the lakes, but where those great propeller lines are in competition with the railroad lines they would make rates or contracts in order to be allowed to make cuts which are the discriminations that are talked of and that you desire to provide against.

In order to be allowed to make these cuts, the railroads now owning them would divest themselves immediately of the ownership of the lines of propellers that have been built up for transportation, and they would leave that part of the line free and open, so that from Chicago to Buffalo, or from Duluth, or from any other great shipping point, they would take grain to the elevators at Buffalo, leaving the rate of transportation from Buffalo to be fixed by the railroad.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from New Jersey permit me to interpolate a remark?

Mr. SEWELL. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I would say that in regard to lake navigation it is the railroads that have brought the freights down to where they are. The lake craft are probably owned by five hundred different parties; they are constantly competing, and it is only when the railroads come down to their very low rates that the lake craft come down, and the railroads are the regulators of the lake craft rather than the lake craft the regulators of the railroads.

In regard to the lines of the different roads which the Senator speaks of, and which he says will be disconnected from the propeller companies, I would say that they form a mere bagatelle in the transportation of the lakes. The Western transportation lines connected with the different railroads carry very little freight proportionately compared with the vast amount carried on the lakes. I believe that without the introduction of the amendment of my colleague it would be exempt from the provisions of this bill. I do not see how the United States could take supervision of that vast freight traffic on the lakes and determine the price of freights from Chicago and from all the intermediate ports to Buffalo any more than I can understand how they could fix the price of tea and flour and sugar.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator says the lake craft regulate the railroads and not the railroads regulate them. How does that accord with the experience that when the lake craft are frozen up the railroads raise their rates?

Mr. PALMER. I may have made that a little too broad. I will say that I have seen freights on the lakes brought down from 27 cents a bushel from Chicago to Buffalo to the minimum of 2 cents. The lake craft, as a matter of course, compete with each other, but it is only the railroads that have brought freights down to the present low rates; otherwise they would combine. They will lay up a number of vessels on the lakes. As it is now it makes no odds whether they lay them up or not; the railroads carry so low that at certain seasons of the year when the railroads desire to compete for the vast traffic of the Northwest there is no money in it to the sailing vessels or to the steamboats on the lakes.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to ask a question before he resumes?

Mr. SEWELL. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Michigan speaks about Michigan particularly, her lakes and railroads; perhaps the Senator is familiar with the Mississippi River and other river transportation.

Mr. PALMER. Only approximately.

Mr. BROWN. Take the case I put a while ago, where a railroad runs parallel to the Mississippi River. The bill as it now stands does not apply at all to the transportation company running on the Mississippi River; it does apply to the railroad company and binds the railroad company, if the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey becomes a part of the bill, not to make any reduction of rate until ten days' notice. Suppose the rate from Memphis to New Orleans is 50 cents a hundred pounds, and the steamboat company on the river gives notice to-day that at 12 o'clock it will commence carrying at 40 cents a hundred pounds; that turns all the business to the boats. Then it is ten days before the railroad company can make any reduction. Suppose the next day after it makes the reduction down to the point where the boats put it the steamboat company again gives notice that at 12 o'clock that day it will reduce 10 cents more; then it is ten days again before the railroad can reduce. The result is to destroy the railroad for the benefit of the river, and there is no remedy for it.

Mr. SEWELL. The amendment offered by me shows the absurdity of attempting to regulate transportation by one route and not by the other. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] is right——

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Georgia asked me a question; what was the essence of that question?

Mr. BROWN. The essence of it, as I intended, was, can the railroad companies be justly called on to meet such competition as that by your turning the boat loose to reduce whenever it chooses and binding the railroad company not to reduce without ten days' notice?

Mr. PALMER. I did not say it was right that discrimination should be made against railroads, but I was somewhat surprised to see this amendment introduced by the Senator from New Jersey on that account. It seems to me to be giving notice to every one that within ten days there will be lower freights, and every one will hold back his freights for the reduction. I do not see how it is going to affect the competing lines.

Mr. BROWN. But the steamboat on the river can reduce when it pleases and the railroad company can not reduce without ten days' notice. Then the boat has the advantage of the lower rate for ten days, and therefore the advantage of the traffic.

Mr. PALMER. In answer to that I will say that the effect in my opinion would be to demoralize business. The people would hold back their freight. They would neither ship by rail nor by boat until the ten days were up.

Mr. SEWELL. If business is going to be demoralized by this legislation, if adopted by Congress, we ought not to pass it. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] is perfectly correct in saying that the railroads have brought the price of transportation from 35 cents a bushel charged by water transportation down to from 6 to 9 cents. It has been forced down by railroad competition. In winter the rate went up 15 cents a bushel and down in summer to 10, and in extreme exceptional cases it has been down to 6 cents a bushel. Instead of relieving the situation, when you adopt the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] you destroy the whole fabric that we have been building up for fifty years.

It is within the recollection of yourself, Mr. President, and of myself, a younger man, when the extreme limit of transportation by rail was to the Ohio River. By reason of the energy and the genius of our people it has been from time to time, and day to day, and year to year pushed mile after mile westward by the building of railroads, by the advancement of science, and the laying of tracks, and the running of locomotives, until to-day we present the spectacle to the world of having accomplished what no other nation and no other people ever has done, of bringing grain, cattle, and other products of that kind 2,000 miles to the seaboard, and allowing the community to have the benefit of competition. No other nation has accomplished this great feat. No other people has practically ever tried it.

The capital invested in the railroad transportation lines of this country is enormous when you come to look at the figures—125,000 to 130,000 miles of railroad, from eight hundred to a thousand million dollars of the absolute savings of the people of the country for forty years invested, because it has been probably the best field of investment when applied to bonds, although that does not apply to stocks. We are told by some gentlemen in the Senate that there is a great deal of water in this.

Mr. President, when I had the honor to address the Senate on this subject at the last session of Congress, I admitted that there was water, but that water is limited to a very small percentage and limited to the lines constructed in late years, and with the approval, as we saw here a few days ago, of those very complaining Senators about water who voted deliberately to allow a company chartered lately to issue any amount of securities for the building of its road. The Senate voted it on the basis that that company should have the same privileges as those that preceded it, and that they could not compete with the previously organized and chartered and running railroads unless they were allowed to have water, as though transportation was absolutely to be by water and not by rail. In other words, that the more indebtedness you piled on a corporation the easier it was to run it and pay expenses! It is hardly necessary to talk about it, but such was the argument and such was the vote.

Mr. President, the railroad men of this country as a class are about the best merchants and the brightest minds we have to-day, and necessarily so. They have the best education of any set of men in the country. Gentlemen who occupy seats in the Senate mostly belong to the legal profession. Coke, Blackstone, are the same, and the classics have not changed. You will never build great railroads on them; you can not follow the progress of the age; you can not settle this country with them.

It takes all the elements of a great man to be a successful railroad manager; and we have a great number of them who have grown up in the last twenty-five years. They must have all the education that any gentleman on this floor gets in order to equip himself as a lawyer or as a Senator; and it is but the starting point of what he has to acquire of professional knowledge in order to fit himself for his position. After he has graduated at Yale or Princeton or Harvard he has to go for four or five years to a special institute for the purpose of learning the science of mechanics, chemistry, metallurgy, and then he rolls up his sleeves and goes into a shop and applies himself to the mechanics about which it will be necessary for him to have a perfect knowledge in his business as the manager of a railroad.

At thirty years of age that young man, never having up to that time probably earned a dollar, preparing himself in every way, spending money to acquire this knowledge, enters upon his career in a subordinate capacity as a railroad man; and if he has the talent and the brain necessary he rises rapidly, because in our country a man of thirty years of age has practically but twenty years of active business vital force in him. That man applies himself to the business of his life. He has all the knowledge that books can give him; he has all the knowledge that practice can give him. He is not a moneyed man. He does not enter upon the business of railroads for the interest of the community in which he lives, but as a matter to furnish for himself a position, and for his family, if he has any, their bread. He has no prejudice, no feeling. He is as well equipped as any man can possibly be to do as near right as any one man can. And this is the class of men you have to-day in the active management of the railroads of this country.

It is not fair to say that those men, absolutely working for a salary without any interest in the railroads, without any dealing in a share of stock or ever going into Wall street, are going to oppress the people. They are the men to-day who have built up this country to be the great nation that it is. Without the genius and the money and the labor and the education that have been applied to getting these men into the positions they hold, your railroad transportation, with the movement of the products of the mines and of the crops, would not have been what it is to-day, and you would never have been able to reduce the cost of the movement of a ton of corn or a ton of wheat from 3 cents a mile down to four-tenths of a cent a mile or 3 mills a mile as has been done within the last two or three years and is being done probably to-day.

Mr. President, I did not intend when I offered this amendment to make any remarks of this kind. I am honest in my belief that if you are going to regulate rail transportation you must necessarily regulate transportation that goes alongside of it, parallel to it, and that is competing with it, and particularly as that transportation would be controlled by the different rail corporations and for the purposes of competition.

Mr. GORMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me to ask a question of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I would ask the Senator from New Jersey in what way he thinks that this notification of reduction would favor the railroads. At first sight it seems to me it would be different.

Mr. SEWELL. I have not said it would favor the railroads. I want to have a bill that would relieve us from some of the charges which are made. This is the worst part of this bill. We make rates to-day and you put the railroad companies to the trouble of making their rate-tables and posting their rates. Then you should provide that they should not be cut the very next day by one of these same corporations without notice. They should last for a period of at least ten days. I would prefer that the period should be thirty days, to give some stability.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Jersey is one that seemed to the committee who examined this subject to be worthy of careful consideration. There is a popular impression that a provision of this sort should be inserted in this bill. Hence we gave the matter a very patient and careful consideration. I think I am justified in saying that every member of the committee, after hearing the arguments on both sides, came to the conclusion, which I do not believe will be questioned by any of the experts who were before us, or by any of the large shippers who have given the matter consideration, that an amendment such as is now suggested would be absolute destruction to all the American roads for the benefit of the Canadian lines. We may not be able to control the Canadian lines, notwithstanding the passage of this bill. They may still have it in their power to give a drawback or rebate of from 1 to 5 cents a bushel, which would take from our roads all the profit which they make from Chicago to the seaboard.

The people of this country are amply protected when they require the railroads to publish to such extent as the commission may determine their tariff of rates, which shall be uniform, and every shipper shall have notice of that tariff, whatever it is. Now occasions occur frequently where a reduction is absolutely necessary and should be made on the instant. For instance, by cable comes the notification that grain will be taken in Liverpool at such a rate to meet the competition of Indian grain. The question must be determined at once whether we will accept that rate or not. If it is to be accepted, it can only be by making a lower rate of freight.

The bill provides that when the railroads make that reduction so as to secure such results, that reduction shall be uniform to all shippers. Therefore the public is amply protected, whereas if you required companies to give a notice of ten days before the reduction can be made the water routes and the Canadian routes would be enabled to embarrass our roads so that they might be bankrupted. The public is amply protected by the publication of the rate.

Mr. SEWELL. Allow me to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator thinks the American roads are amply protected by this bill as it now stands.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, Mr. President, I do, with the bill in the form in which it comes from the committee and in which it stands as amended to-day, with the exception of the one amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator inform me how that protection is to be extended? How do you carry it out? You have a branch of a Canada road to Chicago and you have a road in Maine which forms the other link on our soil. These two roads come in and they file their rates from Chicago. What is there in the bill to prevent the Grand Trunk in Canada outside the United States from giving a drawback? Nothing.

Mr. GORMAN. That is true; there is nothing in the bill that would prevent that. The bill would leave the American roads in the same condition to compete with the Canadian roads that they are in to-day. They meet that by making instantly a reduction whenever it is necessary to meet the competition of the Canadian roads or the water lines. But now the Senator from New Jersey comes in and says by his amendment that our roads shall not make this reduction to meet the Canadian competition and the water competition unless they give ten days' notice. Under that one-half the freight would be gone.

Mr. SEWELL. I intend to follow this amendment by a provision under which the Grand Trunk road would be controlled. This amendment was drawn at a time when it was supposed, and it was based on the idea, that the water lines would also be controlled, and that we should have some permanence of rates, which is what we want to establish. Let us have the American lines, the Canadian lines, and all transportation on that basis that a man may know for a week at least what he is going to pay for his freight.

Mr. GORMAN. All the best minds of this country who have examined this question have come to but one conclusion, that it is not possible to regulate the through rates so long as the Canadian competition exists, except by meeting cut by cut, competition by competition on our side and on theirs. From Chicago until the Canadian road crosses the Detroit River the line is upon American soil; but the moment it crosses the Detroit River and enters the Dominion of Canada we have no control over it; and there is not any legislation that can be devised that will enable this country to control that road except the branch of it within the limits of our own territory. To-day our roads are able to compete with them in price, and we shall always be able to compete with them. We have the shorter line, we have a better climate, and we are able to compete with them if we are left unhampered. But if the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is adopted, there is not a railroad man in the United States who does not know that it would destroy the American roads. I do not believe I do the Senator from New Jersey injustice when I say that he offers the amendment not with that view, but to emphasize his opposition to what has already been inserted in the bill.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. I offered the amendment in connection with a series of amendments based on the bill as reported. The Senator from Maryland voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia, which practically places the railroads of this country in such a condition that the roads east of Chicago, known as the trunk lines, will, rather than sacrifice their local business, say to the merchants and shippers of Chicago, "We will not take your freight except on a basis where we can be left to regulate our local rates profitably." That will not only apply to Chicago, but it will apply to all the great competitive points in this country running from Duluth on the north to New Orleans on the south, and it will apply more to the roads running from here in the direction of the southwest to New Orleans, the Gulf coast, and Atlantic seaboard than it will even to Chicago.

The great lines running to Chicago have been long enough in existence and mostly running through a country that has very large mining or manufacturing interests which have been built up so that there is a local trade to that extent that the companies can say to the people west of Chicago, "If you choose to hamper us with any enactment of this kind, we prefer to attend to our local business and let you get your grain to the seaboard by water or in any other way you can." In other words, when rates get down to the point that they have done, these roads can not possibly exist, and I say it knowingly if that rule is to govern that the through rates are to be the guide for local rates from point to point.

The Pennsylvania Railroad is probably an exception to the general trunk lines. The New York Central probably comes next. Both these great corporations have given a great deal of time and attention and have in many instances spent a great deal of money for the purpose of building up what they considered the great interest of their stockholders, the local business. Wherever it was possible to encourage a flour-mill or a rolling-mill or any great industrial work to come on the line they have done it.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has, under her contract with the State of Pennsylvania when she took the public works of that State, agreed that the rate from Pittsburgh to the Delaware River should at no time be greater than the rates from the points west of the Delaware River. Therefore that corporation has so fixed its business, so encouraged its local traffic in the great underlying strata of coal and iron over which its roadbed runs, and the great industrial establishments employing thousands of men that have grown up in Pennsylvania, that it is enabled to live entirely without any risk of competitive business from Chicago, which now amounts to about 10 per cent.; and if the other corporations which have not these great advantages, which have not the coal and iron of Pennsylvania, were obliged to carry their way business to any point between this side of Chicago and New York, the Lake Shore, the New York Central or Erie, or any great competing line—if they were obliged to do it, would simply have to say we can not do it.

What will be the result? The result is to tear down the fabric you have been building for fifty years. You have demonstrated to the great West that you may transport a cheap class of freight 2,000 miles to the seaboard. You have built up, commencing with the Illinois Central land grant, the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, and all the other great States of the West by what? Many of their inhabitants went there by wagons, but the great majority of them were attracted there by the railroads, by the transportation facilities, by being able to get their produce to market, by being able to have some profit after they have paid for the transportation.

If the railroads say to the great grain depots of Chicago and Saint Louis, "If we are to be governed by this rate for our way freight we prefer not to take it," where do you leave the people of the West? If you insist that the through rate shall in all cases govern the way rate it will result in the great cereals being shipped entirely by water, the elevators and their owners being transferred to New York, Baltimore, Newport News, Philadelphia, Boston, and Portsmouth in the United States, and Montreal in Canada.

Mr. GORMAN. I was not discussing the long and short haul. I was discussing the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey as to the notice to be given of the reduction of rates of railroad companies; but I can not refrain from again calling the attention of the Senate to the statements of two of the most distinguished railroad men in this country: one (Mr. Fink) at the head of all the railroad pools, who is regarded by the railroad people as authority on this question, and the other (Mr. Blanchard), of no less distinction, once vice-president of the Erie Railroad.

Mr. Blanchard, in his statement on page 151 of this report, states, speaking of the long and short haul:

Next take interior interstate commerce, originating from a point illustrated by Columbus, Ohio, and destined, if you please, to Pittsburgh, Pa. The modern and better practice of the railroads is, that although there is nothing between those two points limiting the charges of the railroad companies except the respective State charters of the railroads, not one-fifth of the rates authorized by the charters are in effect charged; and in another respect it has not been the case in ten years that the tariff from Columbus to Harrisburg has been higher than the tariff from Cincinnati to New York. I say the better practice of railroads, because I think public agitation has probably had good effect in this respect. It has, however, been greatly aided, and the result is much more due to the economies of steel rails, straightened lines, and lower grades, greater loads carried per car, improved ballasting, the increased weights of locomotives and trains, and all the effects of railroad competition, independent of the water competition I have referred to, than to any other causes.

Going on to show that the practice of the railroads themselves, where they had an intelligent view of their own interests, was never to charge more for the short than for the long haul, Mr. Fink is equally emphatic on the same point; and I say to my friend from New Jersey that there is scarcely a railroad man in this country of intelligence who does not recognize the rule as a proper one, with the exceptions in this bill, that in certain specific cases a different rule may prevail.

Mr. SEWELL. I have before me here the rates from New York by rail to certain points in the South and Southwest:

From New York to—	Classes.
	1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	6.
Birmingham	$1 14	$0 98	$0 86	$0 73	$0 60	$0 49
Meridian	1 14	98	86	73	60	49
Chattanooga	1 14	98	86	73	60	49
New Orleans	70	60	50	45	45	.....
Memphis	1 02	86	70	50	44	.....
Nashville	97	81	65	45	39	.....
Macon	1 19	1 04	89	75	62	51
Atlanta	1 24	1 06	92	78	63	52
Savannah	99	82	78	71	64	43
Jacksonville	1 11	95	82	68	54	48

The short rates are more than the long ones. If the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia becomes the law, the roads which are now charging to Atlanta $1.24 will be obliged to come down to 70 cents. And let me say that there is not one of them to-day, and the Senator from Georgia will bear me out, that is paying any dividends.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do they make or lose anything by the New Orleans rate?

Mr. SEWELL. They make in this sense, that if they have cars there and they can take a lot of stuff and load it and send it North, they make more than they would by sending empty cars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do they make anything as a general rule?

Mr. SEWELL. Not as a general rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If they do, they are evidently making too much at Atlanta and those inside places.

Mr. GORMAN. It will be remembered that Mr. Fink verified the statement I have made. The great trouble with the transportation interest is that there is no stability in rates. He maintains that there would be no substantial trouble in the question of the long and short haul if there was stability. When the pool was inaugurated he maintained that the local rates between Chicago and New York were maintained on the proper basis; and then the chairman of the committee put him a question which I will read, with his response:

The CHAIRMAN. While you are regulating freights on a road from here to Chicago, for instance, you begin at Chicago to charge so much from there to New York or from New York to Chicago; and you do the same thing as to every other point where there is another road that comes this way? You let each one of the roads cut and carve at every station where there are not two roads, do you?

Mr. FINK. No; there are certain rules upon which tariffs are made from local points. After a rate has been established from a competing paint, say from Indianapolis, it being 93 per cent. of Chicago, then the rate from a point beyond Indianapolis (if it is not a competing point, but a local point on any one of the various roads that run to Indianapolis) is added to the through rate. The local rate, which is generally for short distances, can only be charged to the point where the freight reaches the first competing point The roads can never do more than that. And here I would call your attention to this fact: that high local rates can only be made for short distances. For example, I suppose in Illinois there is no place more than 10 or 20 miles from some competing railway station. In such a case the local rates could only be made high for 20 miles. As soon as the freight strikes a competing point, and is intended to go beyond that point, it gets the advantage of whatever low rates may exist from that point. The local shipper has the full advantage of competing rates.

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you not make the tariffs as though there were no competing points? In other words, if you charge so much from Chicago to New York and there is a station 10 miles this side which is not a competing point at all, why do you not say that the charge from that point to New York shall be so much less, and control that charge as well?

Mr. FINK. It is a rule that this freight should not pay more than from Chicago——

That is the station 10 miles this side of Chicago—

but you can understand that it may cost more to take freight from a point 10 miles east of Chicago than from Chicago. But, nevertheless, the roads generally follow the rule not to charge more.

That is all their own action, as Mr. Fink states. All the bill does is to say that that shall be the rule, "You shall apply the very rules you have laid down in the management of your own roads to the whole public and not make it an exceptional case."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That, I may suggest to the Senator from Maryland, though it is not the rule of the bill, can be made so if the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia should not be agreed to in the Senate. The bill as it stands only provides for a common point of departure and not for a common point of arrival. So in the case supposed the rate might be a dollar a ton, for instance from Chicago to New York, and it might be $2 a ton from a point 10 miles east of Chicago on the same line and going by the same train to New York.

Mr. HARRIS. Not as the bill stands amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the bill stands amended it does not, but as it stood reported. Now, if you add to the clause that was stricken out in committee the common point of arrival as well as the common point of departure, then you have got the status that nothing can be charged greater for carrying goods to New York from any point on any line east of Chicago than you may charge from Chicago itself. And of course I only take that as an illustration. It applies all over the country and in all directions, west as well as east. But if you strike it all out and say that every local rate everywhere shall be no greater than the through rate everywhere, there is a great deal of force in what the Senator from New Jersey has said in respect of going too far in the opposite direction.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not believe that it is proper to hamper the railroads to too great an extent; but there are innumerable cases like that stated by the Senator from California where a shipper from New York is compelled to send his goods through to San Francisco and other competing points 300 miles on the same road beyond the destination and pay the local charges from San Francisco back to the point of destination. Is that an unusual case? There are hundreds of cases on the railroads that enter Washington city where through rates from Chicago are paid and the goods sent back 150 and 200 miles toward the Ohio River paying the local rates back. That is an outrage which is committed by all or nearly all the railroads. It is a practice that they are all engaged in, and it is impossible to control them except by national legislation.

The Senator from Kansas in alluding to the action of the Senator from West Virginia made the statement that this short-haul amendment was practically in the interest of one road, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. If the Senator had consulted a railway map he would have seen at a glance that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is the one road above all others of the trunk lines that is mostly affected by this very amendment. It has not 100 miles running continuously in any one State between here and the Ohio River. It passes through Maryland into West Virginia and back to Maryland again and then into West Virginia, so that nine-tenths of all its local trade is interstate commerce, whereas the great trunk lines of Pennsylvania and of New York, except the Erie, pass through one State for three or four hundred miles, and all that great traffic is local and not to be controlled or affected by the provisions of this bill.

So the Senator from Kansas was entirely mistaken, and I regretted exceedingly to see the turn this debate has taken—that it should be attempted to make the impression here that any local interest was being considered in this amendment or in framing the bill. I regretted that my friend from Iowa should make an appeal to his Western friends that this provision was against the interests of the great West. Nothing can affect the interests of the great West as long as you have independent lines competing with each other and affected by the Canadian roads and by the water lines.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me to call his attention to the fact that the Senator from West Virginia took the ground distinctly that the effect of his amendment would be to prevent transportation from the Mississippi Valley at a less rate than it could be done from Ohio and West Virginia, and he said distinctly that that was all the Mississippi Valley could ask; that they had no right to ask to have their freight transported from the Mississippi Valley to the Atlantic coast for a less rate than freight could be transported from West Virginia or Ohio. I think it is a very unsound proposition.

If we have in the Mississippi Valley advantages which enable us to transport our grain to the Atlantic coast cheaper than you can transport it from West Virginia or Ohio to the Atlantic coast, then you are depriving all that region of country of the benefit of competition, and you are hampering trade, you are hampering commerce, and depriving the commerce of the Mississippi Valley of the benefit which it naturally possesses.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I happen to hold in my hand a statement prepared by Mr. Fink, showing the rates of freight between the cities of New York and Chicago, and I desire to say to my friend from Minnesota that all the rates of freight from every point nearly in the West except the extreme point of the Pacific roads to the Eastern seaboard, are governed or made by the rates from Chicago to the city of New York.

The rate of freight in 1865 of $1.60 on 100 pounds from Chicago to New York city, rate had run down in 1884 to 12 cents per 100 pounds. Now——

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of my friend from Maryland I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the motion is put the Chair will submit two bills from the House of Representatives.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to remind the Senate that by unanimous consent this bill and the amendments to it are to be disposed of to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Decidedly.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BERRY. There was a similar bill reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it is now on the Calendar. I ask therefore that this bill lie on the table, so that it may be called up for action very soon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not know that there was a Senate bill of the same purport on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the Senate bill in the same form as the House bill?

Mr. DAWES. They are so similar that the committee do not care to have a reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table.

The bill (H. R. 5886) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of John Thorns, of Fayette County, Kentucky, be withdrawn, subject to the rule of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 11, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 10, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted indefinitely to Mr. HOUK, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the Chair will proceed to call the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions for reference, under which call memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented, and also resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of Departments.

SILVER-PROFIT FUND.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives a detailed statement of all sums expended by the different mints and assay offices from the fund known as the silver-profit fund, authorized by section 3526 of the Revised Statutes, from and including the year 1878 to the present time.

BENJAMIN MENDENHALL.

Mr. LANDES introduced a bill (H. R. 8609) granting a pension to Benjamin Mendenhall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH BREWER.

Mr. LANDES also introduced a bill (H. R. 8610) granting a pension to Elizabeth Brewer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER S. STEWART.

Mr. LANDES also introduced a bill (H. R. 8611) granting a pension to Alexander S. Stewart; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

STEPHEN H. POWELL.

Mr. LANDES also introduced a bill (H. R. 8612) granting a pension to Stephen H. Powell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

W. J. WIGGS.

Mr. LANDES also introduced a bill (H. R. 8613) granting a pension to W. J. Wiggs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES J. LYELL.

Mr. LANDES also introduced a bill (H. R. 8614) granting a pension to James J. Lyell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR ALEDO, ILL.

Mr. NEECE introduced a bill (H. R. 8615) authorizing the Secretary of War to place at the soldiers' monument in Aledo, Ill., condemned cannon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. KERMAN.

Mr. NEECE also introduced a bill (H. R. 8616) granting a pension to William H. Kerman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZA LUTZ.

Mr. NEECE also introduced a bill (H. R. 8617) rerating the pension of Eliza Lutz; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN C. SCHAUTZ.

Mr. NEECE also introduced a bill (H. R. 8618) for the relief of John C. Schautz; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM HAYES.

Mr. NEECE also introduced a bill (H. R. 8619) granting a pension to William Hayes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY DURKEE.

Mr. FULLER introduced a bill (H. R. 8620) granting relief to Henry Durkee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A. CROUNSE.

Mr. HEPBURN (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8621) increasing the pension of A. Crounse; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM N. ABBOTT.

Mr. HEPBURN also introduced a bill (H. R. 8622) increasing the pension of William N. Abbott, of Davis City, Iowa; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY E. HEDRICK.

Mr. HEPBURN also introduced a bill (H. R. 8623) granting a pension to Mary E. Hedrick; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. WOLFORD introduced a bill (H. R. 8624) to amend the pension laws; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

AMANDA CHILES.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. 8625) for the benefit of Amanda Chiles, of Pendleton County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK NIENABER.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8626) for the relief of Frederick Nienaber, of Covington, Ky.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS ROSS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R.

8627) granting a pension to Thomas Ross, late private Company E, Fifth Pennsylvania Reserves; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN THORNS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8628) for the relief of John Thorns, of Fayette County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRY.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8629) to establish a department of agriculture and industry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAND. I propose to move it as a substitute for the silver-certificate bill to come up on the 25th of this month, and therefore would like to have it referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. MILLER. I think the bill should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, which had charge of the other bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the bill would go, unless a motion was made to the contrary, either to the Committee on Banking and Currency or the Committee on Ways and Means. It relates to the currency, and also to the public debt. The gentleman from Missouri moves that it be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. MILLER. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. It will go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as the principal part of the bill relates to currency.

The bill was referred accordingly, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAH L. GILHAM.

Mr. STORM introduced a bill (H. R. 8728) granting a pension to William L. Gilham; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES MILLER.

Mr. ERMENTROUT introduced a bill (H. R. 8729) granting a pension to James Miller; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WAREHOUSING, ETC.

Mr. HEWITT introduced a bill (H. R. 8730) to modify the existing laws in regard to warehousing and the collection of the revenue; which read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN SEEGER.

Mr. LAWLER introduced a bill (H. R. 8731) to increase the pension of John Seeger, late a member of Company F, Sixth Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CALIFORNIA INDIAN WAR CLAIM.

Mr. HENLEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House of the amount of the unexpended balance of the appropriation made by Congress August 5, 1854, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, for the payment of expenses incurred by the State of California on account of Indian hostilities therein, and of California Indian war bonds issued in payment therefor and carried into the surplus fund, and to report to this House if in his opinion there exists any valid reason why said unexpended balance should not now be reappropriated for the purposes named in said acts of Congress.

UNEXPENDED BALANCES.

Mr. HENLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. 8732) to reappropriate unexpended balances; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AND TENALLYTOWN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. MORRISON introduced a bill (H. R. 8733) to incorporate the Washington and Tenallytown Railroad Company, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MARY J. MAHONEY.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, introduced a bill (H. R. 8734) granting a pension to Mary J. Mahoney, widow of William Mahoney, late a private in Company K, Twenty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ANNIE KRUMHOLZ.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8735) granting a pension to Annie Krumholz, widow of Herman Krumholz; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN M. MAYNARD.

Mr. WAIT introduced a bill (H. R. 8736) granting a pension to John M. Maynard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARY JANE CASE.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. 8737) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Jane Case; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CUT TOBACCO.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (H. R. 8738) to so further amend section 3362 of the Revised Statutes as amended, and section 3363, as makes a distinction in the mode of packing and selling cut tobacco; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

D. P. FIKE.

Mr. HUTTON introduced a bill (H. R. 8739) granting a pension to D. P. Fike; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The remainder of this day has been set apart for the consideration of bills from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SORGHUM AND BEET SUGAR.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a privileged report from the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. If the report is objected to at this time the Chair thinks the objection would be good, as this day is specially set apart for another matter.

Mr. BARBOUR. I shall not object.

Mr. MORGAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back the following resolution with the recommendation that it be passed:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be directed to furnish for the information of the House a copy of department circular of June 6, 1882, offering a premium of $1,200 each for the ten best statements of the process and methods of making sorghum sugar, and a like sum for each of the two best statements regarding the manufacture of beet sugar, and a copy of the award of the committee appointed to carry the provisions of the circular into effect; and also copies of all the correspondence between the department and the Delaware Beet Sugar Company in relation to the same; and also a statement of the amount of awards, and to whom.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENALTIES FOR MAIL DEPREDATIONS, ETC.

Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8740) to amend section 3891 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION, MONTANA.

Mr. NELSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 2886, a bill (H. R. 8741) granting to railways the right of way through the Blackfeet reservation in Northern Montana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 2886 was ordered to be laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF AWARDS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That it shall be in order, when a deficiency appropriation bill is under consideration, to amend the same so as to provide for the payment of any claim the facts of which have been reported to a committee or the House by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act "to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

FREEMAN H. MORSE.

Mr. BOUTELLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8742) for the relief of the sureties on the official bond of Freeman H. Morse as consul-general at London, England; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF STREETS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. DOWDNEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8743) to extend the streets and avenues of the city of Washington, D. C.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. DORSEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8744) authorizing the Union Pacific Railway Company to construct branch roads; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

FREE BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill No. 200.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge, or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac at or near Georgetown, D. C.

The motion of Mr. BARBOUR was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Virginia, which the Clerk will read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase a title in fee-simple, free from all liens or claims of lessees or others, the bridge known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and the approaches thereto, and all the rights and franchises connected with said bridge, for a sum not to exceed $125,000, the title to be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States; and said bridge, when so acquired, shall be used as a free bridge, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and the Secretary of War is further authorized, in case the United States shall acquire title to the said bridge, to repair or reconstruct the same: Provided, That in such reconstruction there shall be a suitable draw in such bridge of such length as may be required to accommodate the vessels navigating said river above said bridge; and for the purpose of acquiring such title and repairing and reconstructing said bridge the sum of $240,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for such purpose, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and one-fourth of the expense of such purchase and reconstruction or repair of said bridge shall be charged to and paid by the District of Columbia, and the balance, three-fourths of the sum so expended, shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 2. That if the provisions of the first section of this act authorizing the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge shall not be fully executed within six months from the passage of this act, and the title therefor approved as therein required, then the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed across the Potomac River at the Three Sisters, above Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, a substantial iron and masonry bridge, with approaches; and the sum of $220,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of said bridge and approaches, the same to be maintained as a free bridge for travel: Provided, That the said Secretary of War shall construct a bridge upon such plan as shall cost no more than the amount herein appropriated, and which cost shall include the construction of a substantial iron bridge over the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and highway, and any and all approaches to the said iron bridge, which said bridge shall not be less than 14 feet in the clear above the water-line of said canal; and not exceeding $15,000 of this appropriation shall be paid out of the Treasury until contracts shall have been entered into with responsible parties, and with good and sufficiemt sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of War, for the construction and completion of said bridges across the Potomac River and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, including the masonry, ironwork, and approaches, at a cost not to exceed in the aggregate $220,000, less such sum as may be expended for advertising and making necessary survey: And provided also, That a draw of sufficient width to permit the passage of vessels shall be constructed in said bridge: And provided also, That one-fourth of the expense of the construction of said bridge shall be charged to and paid by the District of Columbia, and the balance (three-fourths) of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, as soon as possible, cause a survey of the river to be made at the Three Sisters, determine the length, width, and height of said bridge and the length of draw, and thereupon advertise for plans and price for the construction of said bridge, such advertisement to be inserted in one or more daily newspapers published in Washington, D. C.; New York; Cleveland, Ohio; Detroit, Mich.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Chicago, Ill.; and Richmond, Va., for the space of one week: And provided further, That the sum of $15,000 shall be available at once for such investigation and such contingencies as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary.

The report (by Mr. ROWELL) was read, as follows:

By the first section of the bill provision is made for the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge, and converting the same into a free bridge, provided the owners of the bridge are willing to sell.

The second section provides for the building of a bridge at the Three Sisters in case the Aqueduct Bridge can not be purchased.

In the Senate bill provision is made for a draw. Your committee do not deem it necessary or desirable to have a draw placed in the bridge, and therefore propose to strike the provision out of the bill.

Owing to some claim of imperfect title to a small piece of land upon which a part of the north abutment of the bridge rests, your committee propose an amendment providing for the condemnation of title, and by this means make the acquisition of the Aqueduct Bridge dependent alone upon the willingness of the owners to sell.

With the following amendments, the committee recommend the passage of the bill:

In the first section, strike out the provision for a draw.

In the second section, strike out the provision for a draw.

Add the following as section 3:

"SEC. 3. That if in the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge under the first section, at any time, it shall be deemed necessary to obtain from the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, or it grantees, any release or conveyance of any portion of the ground upon which the northern abutment of the Aqueduct Bridge rests, or right to cross the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal from the abutment to Bridge street, or if a good title can not be procured by contract to any property required in the construction of a bridge under the second section, the same shall be acquired by the Secretary of War by condemnation in the manner provided by the act approved May 8, 1872, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes:' Provided, That the condemnation proceedings, if any such proceedings are necessary, shall not prevent the taking possession, on payment of the purchase-money, of the Aqueduct Bridge by the United States, and opening the same to the public as a free bridge, if the same shall be acquired under the first section: Provided further, That the sum of $10,000 of the sum hereby appropriated shall be available to meet the payments under condemnation proceedings, if any shall be had."

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, this bill is designed to procure for the city of Washington a free bridge across the Potomac River into Virginia. There are three ways of reaching Virginia from the vicinity of this city: One by way of the Long Bridge, which is a free bridge, but is also a railroad bridge, and therefore unsafe to a certain extent for travel; another by way of the Chain Bridge, which is some 4 miles above Georgetown, and which is also a free bridge; and the third by way of the Aqueduct Bridge at Georgetown, which is a toll bridge. The object of this bill is to do away with the toll bridge, and obtain for the citizens of Washington and Virginia free passage across the Potomac.

The Senate bill provided for the acquisition of the title to the Aqueduct Bridge provided the company owning it were willing to sell for a sum not exceeding $125,000, and for the reconstruction of the bridge, and for a draw. By the second section of the bill an alternative was provided, in case the owners of the Aqueduct Bridge were not willing to sell, or in case the title to it was not approved by the Attorney-General, that a bridge with a draw should be constructed at the Three Sisters, a point some three-quarters of a mile above the Aqueduct Bridge.

The committee recommend the passage of this bill and recommend an amendment. Inasmuch as for more than forty years there has been no passage-way above the Aqueduct Bridge for vessels except such as could go under it, it was deemed by the committee unnecessary to provide a draw, and because it would cost more to reconstruct the bridge as well as afford an obstruction to travel and it would provide for navigation where there has been no navigation for the period I have mentioned. The committee have also proposed another amendment, which makes provision for the condemnation of a certain part of the Aqueduct Bridge in case the owners are willing to sell, to cover an objection made to a portion of the title. The Aqueduct Bridge has stood for more than forty years. It has been in the possession and ownership of the Alexandria Canal Company, its lessees. In 1881 Congress provided for the purchase of that bridge provided the title was acceptable, and in the alternative that a bridge should be built at the Three Sisters. The title, on examination, was rejected by the Attorney-General, the money appropriated was not sufficient to build a bridge at the Three Sisters, and there was and they still have a toll bridge, but we have no bridge under that act. The objection to the title goes only to a small portion of the north abutment, an abutment some 170 feet long; and about 22 feet, at the upper end of the abutment, rest upon lands to which there is no record title in the Alexandria Canal Company.

There has been, however, an undisputed possession of a little more than forty years. There is a record of the arrangement by which the abutment was built; a record between the city of Alexandria, the Alexandria Canal Company, and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. Originally the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company did not extend down to Georgetown. As early as 1827 the city of Georgetown voted a subscription of $250,000 to the capital stock of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, provided it should be extended down to and connect with a canal to the city of Alexandria, and that facilities should be furnished for the connection of the two canals. Under that subscription an agreement was entered into by which the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company was to furnish ground for terminal facilities, and should build the north abutment to the Aqueduct Bridge. Failing to build it themselves, that abutment was built by the Alexandria Canal Company, at an expenses of $40,000, under an agreement with the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company to pay the amount for the building of the abutment. Twenty-two feet of the abutment rest upon a lot, the fee title to which is in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company; the balance of it rests upon land the title to which was in the United States and was by act of Congress conveyed to the Alexandria company and their lessees. So that a possessory perfect title to those 22 feet is in the Alexandria Canal Company, an absolute, equitable title, by the record agreement of the two companies. Nevertheless the law clerk of the Attorney-General found that it was not a good title.

We therefore have proposed an amendment to this bill, providing for the acquisition of that title, so that in case the bill becomes a law we shall acquire the Aqueduct Bridge, provided only that the owners thereof are willing to sell. The provisions for the Three Sisters bridge, I am frank to say, is designed as an inducement to the Alexandria company to sell the bridge. It is not believed that it will result in the building of a bridge at the Three Sisters. But if there is a provision of law by which it can be built, the value of the toll-bridge would so far cease that the owners would prefer to sell rather than have a free bridge built above them.

The piers of the Aqueduct Bridge cost originally $500,000. They are said to be the best piers in the United States. The bridge is in the proper place, and connects Georgetown with the Virginia shore. We propose in this bill to pay $125,000 for piers that originally cost $500,000. It is the best possible bridge that the Government can obtain to connect with Virginia. And we have guarded this bill so that there can be but little doubt that we will acquire title to the Aqueduct Bridge.

This bill differs from the law of 1881 in this: that the law of 1881 provided for a joint ownership between the canal company and the United States; the United States occupying the bridge for travel, for bridge purposes, and the canal company occupying it for canal purposes. This bill provides for an undivided ownership. It provides for a reconstruction of the bridge upon the piers. It will destroy the aqueduct. There will cease to be a canal across the bridge. There will be no divided ownership, and therefore nothing to obstruct the Government engineers in designing a proper bridge to be built there for the accommodation of the public.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Is this aqueduct no longer useful to the canal company?

Mr. ROWELL. I will answer that question. There is no water in the aqueduct now by reason of a break in the canal between here and Alexandria. The Alexandria Canal and its franchises are in the hands of lessees, and those lessees are under bond to keep up the canal for use. In case they do not, they forfeit their lease. It is true that the principal profit to the lessees arises from the tolls collected. The keeping up of the canal I have not any doubt is a burden to the lessees.

And there is another thing true. Formerly the aqueduct was used to transfer the canal boats of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company across the river into the Alexandria Canal and so down to Alexandria. Above the bridge now is a lock, so that the boats can lock down from the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal into the Potomac River and then be taken down to Alexandria by tow. And that is the way the boats are in the habit of going now.

Mr. CANNON. Then it is only useful—I ask for information—it is only useful now to the canal company as a bridge?

Mr. ROWELL. That is all.

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. What assurances have the committee that if this appropriation is made, or if the bill passes, the company will sell it to the Government for the amount designated in the bill?

Mr. ROWELL. The best assurance I have is the assurance of business judgment. The profit derived from the ownership of the Alexandria Canal Company is the profit of taking tolls from people traveling from here over into Virginia and from Virginia over here. With a free bridge three-quarters of a mile from that bridge those profits would be so materially diminished that it would scarcely pay to keep up the bridge. We have, therefore, that kind of assurance that the owners would be glad to sell if they could get the amount provided in this bill.

I have another assurance, and that is that the owners of the franchises have united in recommending the passage of the bill and the amendments that the committee propose, recognizing the fact that the Government will not much longer tolerate the taking toll of travelers passing in and out of Washington, and that therefore a bridge will be built somewhere. They have faced the question like business men, and I think are prepared to sell.

Mr. CANNON. Can the gentleman state the gross amount of the tolls received there and the net amount?

Mr. ROWELL. I can not. I know they are very large, but I can not state the exact amount. I know further, that under the law of 1881 we appropriated $500,000 to acquire the title (it being a joint title) of the canal company and the lessees. It was tendered to the United States, but we failed to acquire it because of the objection that was raised to the title to the north abutment. Now, we need this bridge, and we can get it in this way cheaper than it can be obtained in any other way. It is on the direct road to Fort Myer and to Arlington Cemetery. The time has passed away when toll ought to be taken for crossing the rivers of the United States. Washington is growing to be a large city, and is destined to be much larger than it is now; it is the home of the General Government, and it will be a reproach to Congress if we longer consent that it shall continue to have its approaches obstructed by toll-gates, thus standing in a different position in this respect from the other great cities of the United States.

There is a public demand for the abrogation of this toll. There is a public demand for a better bridge than is maintained by the present company, and unless we acquire the bridge under this bill the time is not far off when a million and a half of dollars will be expended to build a bridge across the river at Analostan Island. Therefore it is the part of wisdom, the part of prudence, the part of economy to pass this bill now and acquire a title to the existing bridge. The bill provides that the Government shall pay three-quarters of the expense and the District of Columbia one-quarter. It seemed to the committee that that was a fair division.

It may be objected that one end of the bridge rests in Virginia, and that therefore Virginia ought to pay a portion of the expense. One end of this bridge connects with the road that leads to Fort Myer and Arlington, a road already constructed, a beautiful drive in constant use, and if we wait for that county in Virginia to get able to pay even $100 toward building a bridge there we shall have to wait a great many years, because it is a bankrupt county, and it can not help to build a bridge. In short, if we wait for that the bridge will not be built. Besides, on that bank of the river stands Fort Myer and the largest national cemetery, the place of greatest resort in the vicinity of Washington. This bridge therefore is not simply for the convenience of the people who live in Virginia and wish to come to Washington to trade, but it is a bridge for the use of the people who come here from all parts of the United States and from foreign countries and who desire to visit the great national cemetery, the historic ground of Arlington. For these reasons the Government of the United States ought to build this bridge, and ought not to call upon that poor bankrupt county in Virginia to help to pay the expense.

I am not favorably disposed toward the construction of a bridge at the Three Sisters.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. Does the Representative in this House of the district of Virginia in which that county is situated take the position that the county is bankrupt, and therefore ought not to pay any part of the cost of this bridge?

Mr. ROWELL. I take that position, and I do not represent that county in Virginia.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word on this subject. Did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] ask why Virginia does not participate in the expense of building this bridge?

Mr. DUNHAM. No. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] stated that that county in Virginia was bankrupt and unable to pay even $100 toward the construction of this bridge; and my question was, does the Representative of that county here take that position?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not, sir; but I take this position: So far as the county of Alexandria is concerned it is very small and comparatively poor. The population of the county is not at all numerous, and they do not see any reason why they should tax themselves to build a bridge for Washington and for the Government of the United States. As I have said, the county is a very small one, with comparatively poor population, and in that county on the other side of the river the Government itself owns a large tract of land, 1,100 acres of the Arlington estate, which it uses as a national cemetery, and where it has a signal station. Under these circumstances, is it reasonable to expect the people of that little county to come up and tax themselves for the construction of a bridge to connect that Government property with the city of Washington? And I want to say, in this connection, that the State of Virginia has very little interest in this bridge. It would accommodate only a small amount of travel from a portion of two or three counties of that State, and the construction of the bridge is a matter of little or no consequence to Virginia. The great demand for this bridge, as I understand, is a national one. The bridge is demanded because the people of this city of Washington want it. The demand comes also because the people of Georgetown are knocking at the door all the time asking for this accommodation, and the people of Georgetown and Washington are under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress. They have no other body to represent them or to act for them, and if Congress does not extend its strong and protecting arm over this community, who will?

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not speak for Virginia, because I do not represent it, but I do speak from a knowledge of the facts when I say that people of that county in Virginia ought not to be called upon to pay any portion of the cost of the constrnction of this bridge, and I know from investigation that they are unable to contribute for such a purpose. It is an entering-door to the capital of the nation. It connects the national capital with the largest national cemetery. Across this bridge goes all the great visiting travel that comes to Washington, and no man who comes here goes away without a feeling of disgust that the nation has not had enterprise enough to tear down the toll-gate and build a decent bridge by which we can cross into Virginia.

I was saying that I am not favorably disposed toward a bridge at the Three Sisters. That location is in my judgment too far up the river. It would cost a good deal to build roadways on the other side. The outlet on the other side is not a good one. I believe there are parties pressing this measure who desire that the bridge should go up to the Three Sisters; and to prevent that desire being consummated, and make it certain that we shall acquire for the purpose of this new bridge the Aqueduct Bridge, section 3 is proposed as an amendment. I am frank to say I would have been in favor of striking out section 2, providing for a bridge at the Three Sisters, had I not believed it necessary to bring the owners of the Aqueduct Bridge to a proper consideration of their own interests and induce them to tender a title to the United States; because so long as there is no alternative provision of law, so long as the question is simply between the Government and a corporation that may or may not contract, the business inducement would be to hold on to the large tolls which are daily collected from the people crossing to and from Virginia. But when this corporation is brought face to face with the necessity of surrendering the tolls in any event, it seems to me there is nothing left for it but to sell at a reasonable price.

I believe it would cost from $500,000 to a million dollars to replace the piers of the Aqueduct Bridge. They originally cost $500,000. They rest upon solid rock. They were built at a time when labor was honestly applied to such work. They were honestly built, when the price of labor was very much less than it is now. Similar piers built in the same honest way to-day, instead of costing $500,000, would cost a million dollars. We propose to get these piers for $125,000.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. And the condition of those piers is perfect.

Mr. ROWELL. I yield the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] desire to reserve the residue of his hour?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I think it worth while for us to understand correctly the effect of the provisions of this bill. The closing part of the first section provides that—

> For the purpose of acquiring such title and repairing and reconstructing said bridge the sum of $240,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for such purpose, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and one-fourth of the expense of such purchase and reconstruction or repair of said bridge shall be charged to and paid by the District of Columbia, and the balance, three-fourths of the sum so expended, shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Then the second section, after providing for the construction of a bridge, if it shall become necessary, at the Three Sisters, has this proviso:

> And provided also, That one-fourth of the expense of the construction of said bridge shall be charged to and paid by the District of Columbia, and the balance (three-fourths) of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

I concur with the committee in the belief that provision ought to be made for a free bridge; and doubtless the location of the existing bridge is as suitable as any we could get, being at the head of navigation and as near to the city as we can have a bridge without its being in the way of navigation. But in my judgment it is not right to charge the people of the country at large with three-fourths of the cost of construction of a bridge at either location. Why should such a burden be imposed upon them? The people in other parts of the country have to build their own bridges, and they do not apply to the people of Washington to help them.

It is assumed of course that we should do this because the seat of Government is here, and that the Government has an interest in this bridge. It has an interest to some extent, but, it seems to me, not to the extent of three-fourths of its cost. A signal station of the Government is on the south side of the river, as is also one of the national cemeteries, a visit to which constitutes a very pleasant drive. But with the exception of access to the national cemetery and the signal station, I do not know of any use that the Government has for this bridge.

Here is a population of 200,000, a rapidly growing population, and growing doubtless to some extent more rapidly because the people of the United States are being taxed to meet tax-burdens which the people here ought to pay for themselves. It must be understood that the Government already agrees to pay half the municipal expenses of this District. In addition to that it pays out of the general Treasury the entire expense of the preservation and adornment of all the public grounds in the city; and at the cost of the people at large the Government pays for all the hospitals here; these are not paid for by the city at all. Now why is it that the people of the United States are thus to be taxed not only for half the cost of making and keeping in order the streets and avenues, of making and maintaining the water-works, of establishing and maintaining the sewerage system, with all the other expenses of the city, but in addition are to bear these other burdens? It is not the truth to say that the people of the country at large pay only half the expenses of the District; they pay more than one-half, because they pay the entire cost of preserving and ornamenting the public grounds, the parks, the squares or reservations. The fencing and ornamentation of these are done entirely at the expense of the Federal Government. All these beautiful grounds between here and the Monument are improved, as I understand, at the expense of the Federal Government. This, it seems to me, is not quite fair. In my judgment the people of this District, who have a direct interest in its prosperity, an interest in its streets and avenues, its sewerage system, its water-works, its public grounds, ought to be willing to meet a fair proportion of the expenses.

I remember well in 1844, when we passed the act for the permanent government of the District, it was alleged the passage of that act would enhance the value of real estate 25 per cent. Any one who has looked into the subject can not doubt it did increase the value of real estate to that extent. Why? Because while its effect was to relieve the people here of taxation, it increased the taxation of the people in other portions of the Union.

It is not quite right to our constituents at home to forget them and to place burdens upon them which they ought not to be compelled to bear in order that we may relieve the people of the District of burdens which properly belong to them.

Remember, sir, we tax the people out in the rural portions of the country, and while in the cities and towns there is more business and there is more prosperity than in the rural districts, there are to-day poverty and distress almost everywhere. Yet we tax them, these people in the rural portions of the country, in order to raise money to pay for that which ought to be paid for by this people, among whom millions of dollars are annually poured out—a people, too, who have more advantages and more prosperity than those of any other except it may be the population of our great commercial cities like New York, Boston, San Francisco, and New Orleans.

Take away the great business centers, and this District of Columbia, this city of Washington, has more of the elements of prosperity, growing out of the fact the Government pours out here millions monthly, and this people with these advantages, with a beautiful city, with streets, avenues, alleys built for them, unequaled in beauty and convenience anywhere in the world, this people certainly ought to be able to build for their own benefit bridges, and not have them built at the expense of other people, who not only are not to have the benefit of them, but who are now dwelling in poverty and compelled not only to pay this tax but to pay also taxes to support their own governments and to maintain their families besides.

I do not think the people of the country at large ought to be taxed to pay three-quarters of the cost of construction of a local bridge in this District.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is not this bridge used largely for the benefit of the people of Virginia, and does the gentleman propose they should pay any portion of the cost of this new bridge?

Mr. REAGAN. It is not proposed in the bill that Virginia shall pay any portion of it. I understand from statements made by gentlemen who have preceded me the country at the southern terminus of the bridge is sparsely settled and poor.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is so.

Mr. REAGAN. And perhaps they have no great interest, not enough to burden themselves with the cost of such a bridge; but two hundred thousand prosperous people of the city, who desire convenient and pleasant trips across the river, and who wish to have their markets supplied more cheaply and abundantly, and who by the construction of this bridge are to be so much benefited and have the means to pay for it, if they are not willing to pay, then as much as I believe the bridge is needed I would not give it to them.

My view is this city should pay at least one-half of its cost. Some years ago the Government, in consideration of the public buildings being here, used to provide one-quarter of the expenses of the city government. That was enough, seeing the amount of population, the amount of business, and the amount of wealth here. We afterward agreed to pay one-half. In addition, we pay for the public grounds and public hospitals. We pay out of the Treasury the whole expense of the judicial establishment of the District. Indeed, the disposition seems to be to let the people at large bear the entire expense of supporting the government of the city of Washington.

Mr. DUNHAM. Does the gentleman propose that Alexandria County, at the other end of the bridge, shall pay any portion of the cost of the construction of this bridge?

Mr. REAGAN. I am not disposed to discuss that question at all. I am willing to leave that as the committee arranged it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Did not this county at one time belong to the District?

Mr. BARBOUR. Alexandria County once belonged to the District of Columbia.

Mr. REAGAN. If we consider equity in looking to the building of this bridge we are bound to say according to population and wealth they ought to contribute toward its construction. If they do, their proportion according to population and wealth—I judge from what has been said on the floor to-day—would not be very large.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is that the way you build bridges down in your part of the country—down in Texas?

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman if that is not a fair method, that the people should contribute according to wealth and population? That is the way I think it should be done, whether it is or not, and I am in favor of doing that here.

Mr. DUNHAM. Even if they have no wealth and but little population, do not you still make them pay up their proportion?

Mr. REAGAN. I think it would be right.

But if they do not feel able to build a bridge or burden themselves with the liability that it would incur, and if the people of this city feel that it would be desirable or justifiable to come to their aid and build this bridge, I would let them do it in this way: let the Government contribute what might be thought a reasonable proportion of the expenditure out of the general Treasury. But certainly it can not be claimed that the amount proposed here is either just or reasonable.

Mr. ROWELL. But is it not true that three-fourths of the travel across that Aqueduct Bridge is that going to and returning from the national cemetery at Arlington, and at least half of that travel by people who do not reside in the District of Columbia at all?

Mr. REAGAN. As to that, of course I am not able to give any satisfactory answer. It would be mere conjecture.

Mr. DUNHAM. If that is true, then the other fourth are residents of Virginia, are they not?

Mr. REAGAN. It can hardly be assumed, no matter how true the statement indicated by the question of the gentleman from Illinois may be, that the people of the United States who never come here at all should pay for the building of that bridge. That is the point of my objection.

Mr. BLAND. And pay for a bridge for others who do come to travel on.

Mr. ROWELL. It is to be assumed that they are all anxious to come here and willing to come at some time or other in their lives.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, and a good many are very anxious to come who never will get here.

But in every instance, Mr. Chairman, of late when such questions arise we have been going on in this way taxing the people—our constituents at home, poor, laboring, struggling people trying to live, trying to support their families—taxing them on every occasion for the benefit of a few who are more prosperous than they.

If I could do as I should wish, I would say that one-fourth of the cost of this bridge should be paid out of the general Treasury; but inasmuch as Congress has consented that one-half of the expenditure for this district shall be paid out of the general Treasury, and since the Senate has passed a bill looking to the payment of more than one-half, perhaps we might properly consent to pay out of the general Treasury one-half of the amount and let the people who are directly interested in the enterprise pay the other. But beyond that I shall be unwilling to go.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I have a word or two that I would like to say in this connection. I listened to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], who has investigated the subject of this bridge, and I wish to say, as I have already said, that where he makes an investigation of a subject which I have had no opportunity of making, I am always inclined to have great confidence in any conclusions he may reach. I take it from what he says in reference to obtaining this Aqueduct Bridge that it would be more economical to purchase it than it would be to undertake to build one. I would have been glad, though, if he could have told us just how profitable this bridge is to its present owners.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. That is exactly what I wanted to inquire.

Mr. CANNON. But even without that informntion I believe the price, $120,000——

Mr. ROWELL. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Well, $125,000 as proposed is a small enough amount considering the value of the abutments of the bridge.

Now, I am inclined to think, too, that it would be well for the Government to have a free bridge across the Potomac at that or some other convenient point. I must say I would prefer it farther down the river. I have not investigated the location, but, say, somewhere in the neighborhood of the Monument grounds, and from there across to the other side. But I asked my colleague about that, and he said from the investigation he had been able to make and the information obtainable the estimated cost would be from two to two and a half million of dollars at that point.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a clause in this bill that I do not approve and shall not vote for, and that is the clause which proposes that the United States Government shall pay three-quarters of the cost. The rule was made since I have had service in Congress a general rule, that as to expenditures for the District of Columbia the District shall pay one-half and the United States one-half. Now, I am not disposed to object to that, although it is wonderfully liberal to the District of Columbia. Yet notwithstanding that rule, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has well said, there are many things and many occasions where the United States pays the whole, and where the District has been relieved ultimately from the payment of its share; and the gentleman has instanced the judiciary of the District, the courthouse, the protection, improvement, and care of our parks, the watchmen to guard them all about the city, and many other things where the United States pays every dollar, not only for the improvement but also for the absolute policing. Well, the precedents are all that way, and I am content now without any more grumbling to go on and follow in the same line of precedents; but all the while there are coming on from time to time suggestions that the United States, in addition to what it does bear of the expenditures, shall bear a little greater proportion than one-half and frequently all the expenditures for new projects.

Now, a free bridge across the Potomac would be convenient to the people who visit Washington from abroad, but it is a hundred times more convenient for the citizens of the District of Columbia, Washington and Georgetown, and the people who live on the other side of the river, than it is for my constituents, or those of any other gentleman, who come here perhaps once in a period of three or five years. But I am not inclined to say anything about that.

The rule is, substantially, that the District shall pay half and the United States half. So far as my voice is concerned, when this clause is reached, if nobody else moves to strike out three-quarters and insert one-half, letting the Government pay half and the District half, I will, and take the sense of the committee on that proposition.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen seem to forget that Washington is the nation's city, and that it is not exclusively owned by the people who live here. The people of the United States have signified their unwillingness to permit the people who live in Washington to control its destiny. It is to be the home of the Government of the United States. It is to be developed into a city worthy of being such a home; and Congress has determined to keep control of that development. Gentlemen make a mistake again in placing the case of this bridge in the position of the ordinary expenditures of the city of Washington. They forget that the Government owns a valuable property on the other side of the river, and that the District has no interest in that other than the interest that the people all over the United States have. They forget that one of the great objects of a free bridge across the Potomac is free access to the national cemetery. They forget that almost every man and woman who visits the national capital visits Arlington as one of the historic places outside of the District, and that building a free bridge is for the benefit of the poor constituents of my friend from Texas; and I have no doubt that a good many of them have got up to Washington within the last year since there has been a change of administration.

It was for the reason that the bridge passes into another State and because of the peculiar objects of the bill that it was deemed in the Senate and by the House committee that the Government ought to bear a larger portion of the expense of building this bridge than the District of Columbia. I am not tenacious about it. I simply want to do what I think is just. And I think it absolute justice that the nation at large, as it controls this city, should pay more of the expense of building the bridge than the District itself, because I believe the nation at large gets more of the advantages of it than the people of the District.

I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be limited to ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] asks unanimous consent that all general debate upon this bill be limited to ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Say twenty minutes.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Oh, ten minutes are enough.

Mr. KING. No; say twenty minutes.

Mr. ROWELL. I will agree to twenty minutes.

There being no objection, general debate on the bill was limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. KING. There is no one who more cheerfully than myself supports measures looking to useful improvements, and even ornamental improvements, in this national capital of ours. These improvements have cost many millions of dollars. The proposition before the Committee at this time has been very well argued by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], and it will be difficult under the customs that have prevailed in the past to present reasons more cogent for the suggestion that not more than half of the cost of this bridge should be paid by the General Government. It is true, as the gentleman from Texas has said, that while this is, in a measure, a national work, it is to be paid for by people who will never in the world behold it, constituents of all of us who will never see, much less ever use, it.

The city of Washington has already, under the patronage of the General Government, grown rapidly prosperous and wealthy. The owners of real estate have acquired fortunes in an almost incredibly short period of time. At the corner of almost every one of the thoroughfares of the city are to be seen signs of real estate agencies. These men must prosper upon the growth of this city, else they would not be so extensively engaged in this business.

The bridge referred to will be of some use doubtless to the contiguous territory in Virginia. It will be of advantage to the travelers who come here and desire to cross the Potomac and see the cemetery at Arlington. This, Mr. Chairman, is a sad monument. Among the ancients there were no monuments built to civil strife. The Romans, who were perhaps the most patriotic of all peoples, and loved their republic more than any people we have record of, constructed no monuments to civil wars. The memories of those wars were buried in the sacred ashes of the past.

But the great advantage of this work is to be to the city of Washington, to its pleasure-seekers and to those who dwell in luxury. Under that view of the case I think it is but due to those constituencies who dwell so far away to insist that this city shall bear one-half of the taxes necessary for this structure.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to engage in the general debate, the bill will now be read by sections for amendment.

The Clerk read the first section, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase a title in fee-simple, free from all liens or claims of lessees or others, the bridge known as the Aqueduct Bridge across the Potomac River and the approaches thereto, and all the rights and franchises connected with said bridge, for a sum not to exceed $125,000, the title to be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States, and said bridge, when so acquired, shall be used as a free bridge under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and the Secretary of War is further authorized, in case the United States shall acquire title to the said bridge, to repair or reconstruct the same: Provided, That in such reconstruction there shall be a suitable draw in such bridge of such length as may be required to accommodate the vessels navigating said river above said bridge; and for the purpose of acquiring such title and repairing and reconstructing said bridge the sum of $240,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for such purpose, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and one-fourth of the expense of such purchase and reconstruction or repair of said bridge shall be charged to and paid by the District of Columbia, and the balance, three-fourths of the sum so expended, shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment proposed by the committee to the first section was read, as follows:

After the word "same," in line 15, strike out the following:

"Provided, That in such reconstruction there shall be a suitable draw in such bridge of such length as may be required to accommodate the vessels navigating said river above said bridge."

Mr. ROWELL. I move the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, is this offered as a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment reported by the committee to the Senate bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to ask my colleague why it is that the committee propose to strike out the provision for a draw?

Mr. ROWELL. We propose to strike out the provision for a draw because for forty-five years the head of navigation has been at the Aqueduct Bridge, and the Supreme Court has judicially determined that that is the head of navigation, and therefore there is no use in constructing a draw to try to get navigation above the bridge, when it would add greatly to the expense and would be an obstruction to travel.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. As matter of fact is it true that no vessels do go above that point?

Mr. ROWELL. None, except tugs for tows.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, those who are interested in the improvement of our water ways, in order to secure cheap transportation, often object to the excessive granting of charters for the construction of bridges across streams that may be made navigable, and I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether it has been determined that this stream can not be made navigable above this bridge?

Mr. ROWELL. It can not be made navigable more than four miles above by any possibility.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I sent up two amendments which I desire to offer to this bill.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out of line 23, section 1, the words "one-fourth," and insert in lieu thereof "one-half."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also in line 25, section 1, strike out the words "three-fourths," and insert in lieu thereof "one-half."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That if the provisions of the first section of this act authorizing the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge shall not be fully executed within six months from the passage of this act, and the title therefor approved as therein required, then the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed across the Potomac River at the Three Sisters, above Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, a substantial iron and masonry bridge, with approaches; and the sum of $220,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of said bridge and approaches, the same to be maintained as a free bridge for travel: Provided, That the said Secretary of War shall construct a bridge upon such plan as shall cost no more than the amount herein appropriated, and which cost shall include the construction of a substantial iron bridge over the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and highway, and any and all approaches to the said iron bridge, which said bridge shall not be less than 14 feet in the clear above the water line of said canal; and not exceeding $15,000 of this appropriation shall be paid out of the Treasury until contracts shall have been entered into with responsible parties, and with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of War, for the construction and completion of said bridges across the Potomac River and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, including the masonry, iron work, and approaches, at a cost not to exceed in the aggregate $220,000, less such sum as may be expended for advertising and making necessary survey: And provided also, That a draw of sufficient width to permit the free passage of vessels shall be constructed in said bridge: And provided also, That one-fourth of the expense of the construction of said bridge shall be charged to and paid by the District of Columbia, and the balance (three-fourths) of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, as soon as possible, cause a survey of the river to be made at the Three Sisters, determine the length, width and height of said bridge and the length of draw, and thereupon advertise for plans and price for the construction of said bridge, such advertisement to be inserted in one or more daily newspapers published in Washington, D. C.; New York; Cleveland, Ohio; Detroit, Mich.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Chicago, Ill.; and Richmond, Va., for the space of one week: And provided further, That the sum of $15,000 shall be available at once for such investigation and surveys and such contingencies as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary.

Amendments recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia were agreed to as follows:

Strike out in section 2, lines 30, 31, and 32, the words "and provided also that a draw of sufficient width to permit the free passage of vessels shall be constructed in said bridge." Also, in lines 39 and 40, strike out the words "and the length of draw."

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend, in lines 32 and 33 of section 2, by striking out the words "one-fourth" and inserting in lieu thereof "one-half."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, by striking out in line 35 the words "three-fourths" and inserting in lieu thereof "one-half."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to amend by inserting after the word "Columbia," in line 34, section 2, the words "one-quarter by the county of Alexandria, in the State of Virginia." Mr. Chairman, I have heard all that gentlemen have stated here in regard to this bridge, and the inability of the county of Alexandria to pay any part of the cost of constructing it. I concede that the people from this city and from other places in the United States will be the majority of those who will cross this bridge, but, at the same time, I contend that the bridge is to be built for the benefit of the people of Virginia as well as for the benefit of the District of Columbia; and although it might be proper for the State of Virginia to pay a portion of the expense of constructing it, I think the duty more properly belongs to the county of Alexandria. I do not think it is right that we should build a bridge there for the accommodation of the people of that portion of Virginia, and that they should not be required to bear any part of the expense. I do not ask that they be required to bear a large part, but I do not think it is just to the people of the country generally that Virginia should be relieved entirely from any expense for the construction of this bridge. I therefore offer this amendment providing that the county of Alexandria shall pay one-fourth of the cost.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, there is no part of this bridge in Virginia. One end of it just rests on Virginia soil; that is all. The keeping up of the road on the other side of the river will fall on Virginia, but this bridge is entirely in the State of Maryland or the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I was not in when the gentleman from Illinois made his explanation of this bill, and I will ask him to state now where this contemplated bridge is to start—in what States its ends are to rest.

Mr. ROWELL. The bridge—I mean the Aqueduct Bridge—is entirely in the District of Columbia, except that the south end of it rests on the Virginia bank.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I refer to the bridge that is contemplated by section 2 of this bill.

Mr. ROWELL. That bridge would start from this side of the river, three-quarters of a mile above the Aqueduct Bridge, at a place where there are some rocks known as the Three Sisters.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In the District of Columbia?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir, in the District of Columbia. It crosses the river there and rests its other end upon the Virginia bank.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then the other end of the bridge is in the State of Virginia?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, in Virginia; but the whole of the bridge is in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] is right in saying that one end of this bridge will accommodate the people of Virginia and the other the people of the District of Columbia.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. DUNHAM; and there were—ayes 16, noes 68.

Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. DUNHAM, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. ROWELL, to act as tellers.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. ROWELL] seems to be anxious to have this bill passed. I do not think it is right, I do not think it is just to the people of this country; but at his request I will withdraw the point of "no quorum."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the second section of this bill.

I am very reluctant under any circumstances to vote for or approve the construction of a bridge at the Three Sisters. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois in charge of this bill [Mr. ROWELL] fully concurs in that judgment. As a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the last Congress I had occasion to examine into this question and to visit the several places which were proposed as fit points at which to construct a bridge, and I think the only reason in favor of the Three Sisters is that the river there presents admirable facilities, from the engineer's point of view, for the construction of a bridge. In the channel of the river there are large masses of stone which would form a natural pier for a bridge at that point; and while by reason of that fact, and of the fact that the river is very narrow there, a bridge could be constructed at less cost than at any point lower down the river, yet when constructed it would not be a convenient bridge so far as the accommodation of travel is concerned. It would not be convenient at the present time, and I do not anticipate that at any future time, looking to the probable growth of the city, it would ever be a convenient bridge with reference to the demands of public travel.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You mean the bridge provided for in the second section.

Mr. WILSON. I mean a bridge at the Three Sisters.

Now I cordially support the proposition to acquire the piers of the Aqueduct Bridge and to construct a new bridge at that point. Those piers are magnificent specimens of masonry, having been constructed, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] well said, in the good old honest days more than twenty-five years ago.

Mr. ROWELL. Forty-five.

Mr. WILSON. It does not matter how far you go back, provided you skip the last twenty-five years.

Mr. DUNHAM. Was not this bridge built by slave labor, that worked for nothing?

Mr. WILSON. I say it was built in the good old days when the Government got an honest day's work for a fair day's wages.

Mr. DUNHAM. Was it an "honest day's work" that made the slave labor for nothing?

Mr. WILSON. I do not know whether this bridge was built by slave labor or not; but if it was, it is probable that labor was treated as well as many employers treat their laborers now.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The less said about that the better.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Now, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] has stated, the second section is introduced into this bill as a sword to be suspended over the heads of the owners of the Aqueduct Bridge to force them to come to terms. So far as that purpose is to be accomplished I fully agree with the design of the committee; but I should be very reluctant to enact into a law a section which under any circumstances would commit or force the Government to expend $220,000 in the construction of a bridge which would not be at a proper point on the river and would not meet the demands for a free bridge as they now exist in this District and will probably exist hereafter.

Mr. HEARD (to Mr. WILSON). The committee all agree with you on that point.

Mr. WILSON. I am informed by the gentleman from Missouri that the committee all agree with me on this point. My only difficulty is in voting for this second section. So far as it is a menace, so far as it is to be used to compel the owners of the Aqueduct Bridge to submit to the condemnation and purchase of their property, I am heartily in favor of it. So far as there is any possibility that this section might be carried into effect and a bridge built at the Three Sisters by the expenditure of $220,000, I am entirely opposed to it. But at the suggestion of gentlemen of the committee I am disposed not to press my motion, and with these remarks I withdraw the amendment which I offered.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I renew the amendment to strike out the second section.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that this second section will not be effectual even as a menace to the Aqueduct Bridge Company, because that company will not have any reason to suppose that the Secretary of War or any Government officer would proceed to build a bridge which would be simply a supernumerary structure, three-fourths of a mile from an existing bridge. Every corporator in that old company has brains enough to reason that far; and as the section would be improper on its own basis and ineffectual as a means of reducing the price at which the Government could condemn the Aqueduct Bridge, I see no reason for retaining the section in the bill.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, it is suggested that no Secretary of War would do such a thing as construct a bridge at the Three Sisters. Yet under the law of 1881, the Secretary of War did advertise for bids and prepare plans; and the only reason the bridge was not built at the Three Sisters was that the appropriation was not quite large enough. The Three Sisters would be the next best location to the Aqueduct Bridge. We can not condemn the Aqueduct Bridge. We can condemn the land upon which the abutments stand, but we can not condemn the franchise; we must get that by purchase. The location at the Three Sisters is but three-quarters of a mile above. If a bridge be built there, it will furnish free access into Virginia, necessitating only a mile and a half farther travel between this city and Arlington. There are a great many people in Virginia and some in the District of Columbia who are strongly in favor of a bridge at the Three Sisters. In my judgment the Senate designed to have the bridge constructed there because the bill as passed by the Senate made no provision for acquiring the title of the Aqueduct Bridge Company. But because the Secretary of War under this bill as amended will build the bridge at the Three Sisters if we do not acquire the Aqueduct Bridge, we shall get the Aqueduct Bridge.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the second section for several reasons. I do not believe in the doctrine that in order to secure one property we should get up a proposition to whiplash certain interests by proposing to buy another property. There are a good many strings to this bow; and the proposition that the American Congress shall put through a bill making an appropriation to purchase a certain property, provided it can not whip in the owners of another property to sell, is a kind of legislation I am not in favor of.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is for the interest of the District to build a bridge at the Three Sisters. The people of Washington who visit Arlington do not want to take that roundabout way of going there. I can readily understand if I owned property in the vicinity of the Three Sisters I would like that provision of the bill, but for one I do not believe in building bridges at remote points to accommodate the people of the District simply because there are private interests there which have been whipping it forward for months, as I understand.

I hold it is our duty to dispose of this question in regard to the existing Aqueduct Bridge. For one I think we should have one still nearer than that in Georgetown. I understand we had legislation once before to purchase this bridge, but it was found we could not get the title to it. We are going through the same thing again we had before. I think we should have some information from the War Department in regard to the location of these bridges. If we are going to build a bridge independent of the present one let us have all the information we can have as to building one more conveniently located. But for the present there is far too much ambiguity, too much uncertainty, too many negroes in this fence, as it seems to me at present, to induce me to support the measure. And from the information I have I serve notice upon the House now I will resist that bill with all the means within my power so long as that second section is in it, and I feel justified in doing it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, this bill simply makes provision for a free bridge between the District of Columbia and the State of Virginia, and it is a question as to where it is best to be located. There is a bridge already in existence which belongs to certain private parties which we have no power to take. We propose to become the purchasers of that bridge provided we can get it at a reasonable cost. But if we can not get it at a reasonable cost we propose, in an additional section, to authorize the Secretary of War to build a bridge at the next most available place.

That is all there is in it, and there is no negro in the wood-pile, as has been intimated, so far as I can see. It has met the approval of the Senate District Committee, and it has met the unanimous approval of the District Committee of the House.

It is for the House to decide whether or not upon the simple suggestion of something being wrong with this bill they will stand to see it opposed, now we have got along this far with it.

There can be no possible objection to the second section unless we see fit to put ourselves in the power of these gentlemen who are the owners of toll Aqueduct Bridge. If there is any objectionable part let us strike it out.

One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars has been decided to be the proper amount to be paid for the Aqueduct Bridge, but if these gentlemen do not desire to take that, then we serve notice upon them we will put up a bridge where we will not have to pay, and where there will be injustice done to nobody. For, sir, Congress has already passed a bill providing for the construction of a bridge at this place of the Three Sisters. We give these gentlemen the alternative, instead of forcing the Government to go there to build a bridge which will take away much of the value of their property, to sell it to the Government at a fair and reasonable price. If that is not satisfactory to them they can not ask the Government to refrain from building a bridge at another, though less available, point.

Therefore, I submit to the House the only question is whether we shall have the bridge at all; or if we do, whether we are willing to purchase this bridge at a reasonable price, and if we can not get it at a reasonable price, whether we will build a bridge at the next most available place.

The people are largely interested in this bridge. The Three Sisters is not as good a place as the one already occupied, but it is the next best place. If we can not buy the best place, where the bridge now is, we can go farther up the river, and build a bridge which will interfere with these gentlemen, of course, but before we do that we give them the right of selling out and saving themselves.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment to the second section, which I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "also," in line 32 of the second section, and insert:

"Provided, That one-fourth of the expense of the construction of said bridge shall be charged to and paid by the District of Columbia; one-fourth by the county of Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, and the balance, one-half, of the sum appropriated shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. ROWELL. I make the point of order that we can not charge anything over upon the State of Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will first take the question upon perfecting the section before the question is taken upon striking it out.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to be heard for a few moments upon the amendment I have submitted.

I understand, and in fact it is well known as a part of the history of this country, that the county of Alexandria, immediately opposite Washington, was originally a portion of the District of Columbia. The Congress of the United States ceded it back to the State of Virginia, but whether the State of Virginia paid anything to the United States for the transfer of the property or whether it paid nothing I am not able to say. At any rate, it is at this time a part of the State of Virginia, a valuable piece of property belonging to the State, and it certainly is worth something to that State, which has the privilege of imposing taxes upon it and upon the people living there either for the purpose of carrying on the State government of the State of Virginia or for a part of the expenses of the county of Alexandria, or perhaps still more for the purpose of assisting the State of Virginia in paying its just debts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe we ought to have a free bridge across the Potomac, not only for the benefit of the people of the city of Washington and the people who come here from other parts of the United States, but also for the benefit of the people of the State of Virginia, and especially those who reside in the county of Alexandria. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], my colleague, has said that this bridge does not rest in the State of Virginia. I believe that the approaches to this bridge are in the State of Virginia, or at any rate they come from the State of Virginia and afford convenient access to this District for the people of that portion of the State. I do not believe that it is fair or just that the other thirty-seven States of this Union should be compelled to pay a part of the expense of the people of the county of Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, for coming into the capital of the nation. The people of Illinois who desire to come to the Federal capital must pay their railroad fare. The Government does not aid them in that respect; but the the people of Virginia are to be permitted to come to the capital free under the terms of this proposed legislation. They will come free, but let them pay a part of the expense of the building of this bridge, so that to some extent at least they may be placed upon an equality with the people of the rest of the United States residing outside of that county.

If there is any real estate speculation in the building of this bridge in Georgetown I am not aware of it, and as it seems, under all the circumstances, the best place for the bridge I do not see that that should really be considered as part of the argument either way. I do say that we should have a free bridge, and I join with the Committee on the District of Columbia in believing the quicker it is built the better, but I say further that it is not right to build this bridge contrary to all the practices and customs adopted in all of the States and towns and cities throughout the Union. Wherever a river divides two towns it is never the practice for one town to bear the entire expense of the building of a bridge to connect them, but the custom has been, and I doubt if there is any variation from it, that the two towns share the expense in some proportion. For instance, if one has a larger population than the other, it would pay its share in proportion to its population, or it may be determined by the business of the towns. But there is some plan devised by which the expense is proportioned between them in a proper way.

Mr. ROWELL. How is it if the river is all in one town and the line is on the other?

Mr. DUNHAM. My colleague asks me how is it if the river is all in one town and the line on the other. I reply, I believe it is the practice, the custom everywhere, for the people for whose benefit it is built to pay a part of the expense of building. If just the place where the piers happen to stand may be in the same town it is unjust to that town to require it to pay the entire expense of the construction of the bridge, relieving all the people on the other side from paying anything. I believe that the State of Virginia gets more benefit from the construction of this bridge than the people of Washington will. The gentleman from Texas says that they want to bring their vegetables across so that the people here can buy them cheaper. I say that the people of that part of the country are more anxious to bring their produce across to make a profit on raising them than we are to buy them; for there are places which are accessible to us from which we can get vegetables without the necessity of building a free bridge to enable the people of the county of Alexandria to come across to supply us. My judgment is that the soil of that county, from what opportunity I have had of inspecting it, is of such a character that it is necessary for the good Lord to send his showers on the ground at least once in every ten days to enable them to raise their crops. [Laughter.]

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Let me ask the gentleman what warrant there is in the Constitution for imposing any portion of the expense of this bridge upon the people of another State.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman asks me what warrant there is in the Constitution for this amendment. In answer to him I want to say that I am not one of those members of Congress who sit up nights and worry about the constitutionality of a question. There are plenty of constitutional lawyers to explain the Constitution. For my part, I believe that whatever is necessary for the people of the United States in the way of legislation it comes within the Constitution. I would not violate the Constitution, and can not see wherein this amendment is any violation of that instrument. It simply proposes that thirty-seven States shall not be taxed to pay an expense that legitimately belongs to the county of Alexandria in the State of Virginia.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It is difficult for me to see just how the people of the State of Illinois are to be benefited by the gentleman's amendment. The bill has already been amended so that half the expense shall be laid on the District of Columbia, and the balance of the expense on the United States.

The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] does not propose to relieve the United States from any of the expense; and yet he goes on making his argument upon the hypothesis that the people of the United States are to be benefited if only something shall be saddled upon the State of Virginia; and the part he proposes to saddle on the State of Virginia is taken from the District of Columbia. How does that relieve the people of Illinois or any other State? To relieve the District of Columbia by taxing Virginia does not relieve the United States of the half she is to pay under this bill. But the gentleman argues that is to benefit the State of Illinois. It is difficult for me to see how that would be the result.

Now I want to say a word with reference to the proposition to strike out the second section, for that is still insisted on by the gentleman from Iowa, although withdrawn by the gentleman from West Virginia. Is it unreasonable that we should make it to the advantage of the owners of the Aqueduct Bridge Company to sell their property? Is there anything dishonest in that? If we strike out the second section, if we leave the power in their hands to sell or keep it, and keep it at great profit, will they not for all time hold on to it? The inducement which this bill offers is to provide at the same time with its passage a plan for the construction of another bridge, and in such close proximity to the Aqueduct Bridge that the construction of it will make the property held by this corporation worthless. If a free bridge is built within three-quarters of a mile of the present Aqueduct Bridge, who will give a cent for the present bridge? Put a free bridge across the river within three-quarters of a mile of the present bridge, and the owners of it will come quickly to time, on reasonable terms, for the sale of their property. But the gentleman from Iowa, by his amendment, would leave the cudgel still in the hands of the present corporation. That certainly ought to be satisfactory to the most avaricious members of it. They could desire nothing better.

What good business management on the part of the Congress of the United States would dictate is to provide at the time of the passage of this bill the means for constructing a new bridge so near the old one as to make the old one absolutely valueless as a toll-bridge, thereby inducing the owners of the old bridge to sell their property to the United States for a reasonable consideration.

And that is all that the second section of this bill is placed in it for. That is the purpose of it. It is admitted openly and above-board. There is nothing secret or underhand, nothing dishonest in this. It is what should be provided in the bill, and no one should object to it.

The gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] asserts there is a job in it on behalf of the property-owners on either side of the river at the Three Sisters. How can that be if the bill provides for the purchase of the old bridge if offered at a reasonable price? On the contrary, as it seems to me, the second section offers a sure and convenient means of preventing a job being set up to cheat the Government. I am heartily in favor of the bill. The bridge should be built at once, so as to get rid of the exorbitant tolls levied upon all the people who would visit the national cemetery at Arlington. To strike out the second section is to defeat the purposes of the bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I beg to say a word on this amendment. I do not know that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM], perhaps, understands the exact relation which the State of Virginia holds to this whole question. The river Potomac has been by adjudication settled to be exclusively in the State of Maryland to low-water mark on the south side of the river, so that when the State of Maryland ceded her portion of the District of Columbia to the Government and the State of Virginia ceded her portion, the 10 miles square, which then included what is now the county of Alexandria, was Virginia soil down to low-water mark on the south side of the Potomac.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Was that arrangement made in the articles of cession?

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir; that was the division between the two States, and when Virginia and Maryland ceded their respective portions for the District of Columbia to the Federal Government the part which belonged to Maryland so ceded extends to low-water mark on the other side.

That question was argued in a Maryland court in March, 1861. I took part in the case on behalf of Virginia, the case testing in some degree the question of the boundary between the two States. It was in that case settled, and has been settled by a commission that was appointed by the two States, of which Judge Jere Black was one and Mr. BECK was another, that the boundary line was as I have indicated.

In 1846 the Government retroceded Alexandria County, the part which Virginia had given for the District of Columbia, back to Virginia. And therefore Alexandria County in Virginia comes down to low-water mark on the south side of the Potomac, and all the rest of the river belongs to the Federal Government or at least is within its jurisdiction. Therefore, the whole of this bill relates to that which is within the exclusive legislative power of the Federal Government. It has nothing to do with anything that is within the jurisdiction of Virginia.

The only reason it has planted its abutment on the south side of the river is because, as I understand, the State of Virginia has given her consent to it. Now, the proposition of the gentleman, by his amendment, that the Government shall build a bridge, pay one-half of the cost out of the Treasury, charge one-fourth to the District of Columbia, and the remaining one-fourth to the county of Alexandria, is ultra vires. It is beyond the power of the Government to do that, and if you were to do it the county of Alexandria would snap its fingers in your face and say, "Enforce it."

Mr. DUNHAM. Then, under the terms of this amendment, the bridge would not be built.

Mr. TUCKER. The bridge would not be built; and if you want to defeat the construction of the bridge, your amendment will accomplish that.

Mr. DUNHAM. But it would show the people of the county of Alexandria and the people of Virginia that Congress thought in justice to the rest of the people of the United States Virginia ought to pay some proportion of the cost of building this bridge.

Mr. TUCKER. Well, if you were building a bridge inside of Virginia that might be a question.

Mr. DUNHAM. The roadway leading to the bridge is in Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. The roadway does not help you at all. The bridge itself is over the water of the Potomac, which is exclusively under the jurisdiction of Congress. You simply ask that you may put one of your abutments over on Virginia soil, and Virginia consents. That is all.

Mr. DUNHAM. One of the abutments of the bridge between New York and Brooklyn is in Brooklyn, and Brooklyn had to pay her portion of the cost of building the bridge.

Mr. TUCKER. That may be; but Brooklyn and New York are both in the same State and within the same jurisdiction. The difficulty in this case is that the District of Columbia is within the jurisdiction of Congress and the county of Alexandria is not. For these reasons I think the amendment ought not to be adopted. If it could be effective to make a charge upon the county of Alexandria it would be unconstitutional, and although the gentleman does not trouble himself about the Constitution at night, he may perhaps give it some consideration in the daytime. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman one question. For whom is this bridge to be built? For whose benefit?

Mr. TUCKER. Well, sir, as the Committee on the District of Columbia have brought the bill into the House, I presume that it is to be built for the benefit of the District of Columbia. I have not heard that Virginia has asked for the construction of this bridge.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will not the people of Alexandria get some benefit from the bridge?

Mr. TUCKER. Oh, they will come across. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. You say that the people of Virginia have not asked for this bridge?

Mr. TUCKER. They have not.

Mr. DUNHAM. If I am not mistaken I have been reading in the papers for two years that the people represented by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] have been urging him, as their Representative, to hurry up the building of this bridge.

Mr. ROWELL. The gentleman is mistaken. The constituents of the gentleman from Virginia are divided on the subject. The people at one end of his constituency do not want the bridge built at all.

Mr. DUNHAM. You say the people at one end of his constituency do not want it built. What do the people at the other end want?

Mr. ROWELL. The other end is very small; but I guess the people there want to have the bridge built.

Mr. DUNHAM. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. Then how unfair is the gentleman's proposition to charge upon all the people of that county one-fourth of the cost of building this bridge when one-half of them are opposed to building it at all! [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Well, if they do not want the bridge, I do not think the Congress of the United States ought to try to force it upon them.

Mr. TUCKER. We do not want it. The Government here wants the bridge in order to get across the river into Virginia. Well, we have no objection; we are a hospitable people. [Laughter.] Then, you want our vegetables, grown upon that soil which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] says is so poor that the Almighty has to send rain every two or three days in order to make it produce anything; and if that is the case how can he find it in his heart to impose upon so poor a soil and so poor a people the burden of paying for the construction of this bridge? [Laughter.] I appeal to the gentleman's magnanimity if I can not to his knowledge of constitutional law. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Then your position is, that you want us to be charitable to the people of Virginia and build this bridge for them for nothing?

Mr. TUCKER. No; charity begins at home. You need our products, and you need this bridge to enable you to get them.

Mr. DUNHAM. I also think charity begins at home; and I think we had better be charitable to the people of the United States, keep a part of this money in the Treasury, and let the people of Virginia pay a part of the cost of constructing this bridge.

Mr. STEELE. Save it for rivers and harbors. [Laughter.]

The House divided on the amendment offered by Mr. DUNHAM; and there were—ayes 11, noes 71.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, to strike out the second section of the bill.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 75.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No quorum.

Mr. BARBOUR. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The point that no quorum has voted being made, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 11, noes 131.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will not insist further on the point that no quorum has voted.

So the amendment of Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, was rejected.

The next question was upon the amendment proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to add to the bill the following:

SEC. 3. That if in the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge under the first section, at any time, it shall be deemed necessary to obtain from the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, or its grantees, any release or conveyance of any portion of the ground upon which the northern abutment of the Aqueduct Bridge rests, or right to cross the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal from the abutment to Bridge street, or if a good title can not be procured by contract to any property required in the construction of a bridge under the second section, the same shall be acquired by the Secretary of War by condemnation in the manner provided by the act approved May 8, 1872, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes: "Provided, That the condemnation proceedings, if any such proceedings are necessary, shall not prevent the taking possession, on payment of the purchase-money, of the Aqueduct Bridge by the United States, and opening the same to the public as a free bridge, if the same shall be acquired under the first section: Provided, further, That the sum of $10,000 of the sum hereby appropriated shall be available to meet the payments under condemnation proceedings, if any shall be had.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROWELL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. WILSON. Before that question is put I desire to offer an amendment. There is already on the statute-book a law, approved February 23, 1881, directing the Secretary of War to build a bridge at or near Georgetown and appropriating out of the Treasury for that purpose $140,000. That law has hitherto remained a dead letter; and it is of course the intention that it shall be superseded entirely by this bill. I therefore offer an amendment to add to the bill a fourth section, repealing the law of 1881.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON was read, as follows:

After the amendment last adopted add the following as a new section:

"SEC. 4. The act approved February 23, 1881, entitled 'An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' is hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I desire to offer an amendment to the second section, to insert after the word "Virginia," in line 45, the words "Saint Louis, Mo.," and to strike out in the same line "one week" and insert "four weeks."

Mr. ROWELL. That amendment is subject to a point of order. The second section has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to recurring to the second section for the purpose of adopting this amendment?

Mr. ROWELL. I make the point of order against it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I object to going back to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made that the second section has been passed, and that it is now too late to go back to it.

Mr. HALE. I believe the gentleman in charge of the bill has no objection to this amendment. I do not understand that the point of order is insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order to be insisted upon.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman in charge of the bill has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. ROWELL. I have no objection to inserting "Saint Louis, Mo.;" but I object to extending the time for advertising.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made also by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HEMPHILL. I withdraw the point of order against the amendment so far as it proposes to insert the words "Saint Louis, Mo."

Mr. ROWELL. I have no objection to that part of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Then I will seek an opportunity to offer the other branch of the amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the first branch of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALE], to insert after "Virginia," in line 45 of the second section, the words "Saint Louis, Mo.," will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COMPTON. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will accept an amendment to his amendment, so as to add after "Saint Louis, Mo.," the words "the city of Baltimore, Md."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, so far as not objected to on the point of order, has been agreed to.

Mr. COMPTON. Then my amendment is too late?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Was the amendment to allow four weeks for advertising agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. ROWELL. I now renew the motion that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker have resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C., had directed him to report back the same with amendments and with the recommendation that it pass as amended.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask the previous question on the amendments and on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Unless a separate vote be demanded on some amendment, the question will be taken upon the amendments in gross.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachussetts, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 216) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certificates of discharge to certain members of the Missouri Home Guards;

A bill (S. 223) to regulate the promotion of graduates of the United States Military Academy; and

A bill (S. 1471) to remove the charge of desertion from the rolls and records in the Office of the Adjutant-General of the Army against certain soldiers.

BONDS OF EXECUTORS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up from the House Calendar a bill (H. R. 7879) to amend the law relating to bonds of executors in the District of Columbia.

There was no objection, and the bill was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That whenever hereafter a testator shall, by last will and testament, request that his executor or executors be not required to give bond for the performance of his or their duty as such executor or executors, then and in such case the bond required of such executor or executors shall be in such penalty as the court may consider sufficient to secure the payment of the debts due by said testator; and said bond shall be conditioned accordingly, and shall be in no other or greater penalty: Provided, however, That the penalty of this bond shall not exceed double the value of the estate; and when less than this sum, may be increased, or an additional bond be required, whenever it shall be made to appear to the court that the bond as given is insufficient to secure the payment of the debts of the testator: And provided further, That whenever any creditor or distributee or legatee entitled to take under the said will shall make it appear to the court that any executor who has given such bond only as is herein provided for is wasting the assets of the estate, or that the assets in the hands of such executor are in danger of being lost, wasted, or misappropriated, then and in such case the court shall have power to remove said executor or require him to give additional bond, with security in penalty sufficient to secure the interests of all the creditors and distributees or legatees entitled to take as aforesaid, and conditioned accordingly; and on his failure to give bond or bonds as aforesaid, as required by the court, within a time named by such court, his letters testamentary shall be revoked forthwith.

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] who has reported this bill to take charge of it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is a bill to amend the law in this District relative to bonds to be given by executors. As the law now stands every executor appointed to carry out the provisions of a will is required to give a bond in such sum as the court may deem necessary. That has become impossible in the case of many large estates. Legislation similar to this has been adopted in twenty-five States of the Union. Members of the bar here seek to have the law amended so a testator may relieve his executor from giving his bond by putting a request to that effect in his will, except the court may require him to give a bond sufficient to cover the indebtedness due at the time of the death of the testator.

A further provision is added to the bill, which enables any legatee or creditor to call upon the executor to give additional bond upon his satisfying the court the assets of the estate are being wasted and he is liable to lose his debt or his legacy.

It is a just and equitable measure; and unless further debate be desired upon it, I shall call for a vote and will not further take up the time of the House.

Mr. STORM. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether there is any provision in the bill by which the surety on a bond may go into court and ask to be relieved?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The surety has a right to be relieved, I would suppose, under the general statutes relating to the District.

Mr. STORM. Is there a provision of law of that kind? There is nothing of that sort in this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is only to amend the law as it now stands relating to this one subject.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOOK-MAKING AND POOL-SELLING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, a bill (H. R. 5044) to prohibit book-making of any kind and pool-selling in the District of Columbia for the purpose of gaming, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, was taken from the House Calendar and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, or association of persons, to bet, gamble, or make books and pools on the result of any trotting-race or running-race of horses, or on any election, in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That any person or persons, or association of persons, violating the provisions of this act, shall be fined not exceeding $500 nor less than $100, or be imprisoned not more than ninety nor less than thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendments of the committee to the first section were read, as follows:

After the word "persons" insert "in the District of Columbia;" and after the word "horses" insert "or boat-race, or race of any kind;" and strike out in line 7 the words "in the District of Columbia" and insert "or contest of any kind;" so the section will then read:

"Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, or association of persons, in the District of Columbia, to bet, gamble, or make books and pools on the result of any trotting-race or running-race of horses, or boat-race, or race of any kind, or on any election or contest of any kind."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendment of the committee to the second section was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "twenty-five;" so the section will then read:

"SEC. 2. That any person or persons, or association of persons, violating the provisions of this act, shall be fined not exceeding five hundred nor less than twenty-five dollars, or be imprisoned not more than ninety nor less than thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 4.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point of no quorum for the purpose of raising the question whether we shall run the horse-race or this House; whether members shall go there or shall come here. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the amendment now being voted on is to fix a minimum penalty. If he wants to call a quorum, he can do so upon the bill and not upon this amendment.

Mr. PRICE. I will waive the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now ask for the reading of the bill as it has been amended.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not seem by this act any association is included. It may be more far-reaching than it seems. I do not know with certainty whether or not the stockholders of these corporations are included under its provisions and will be affected by its execution.

Mr. STORM. Is the gentleman going to take advantage of the absence of the enemies of this bill and put it through?

Mr. HEMPHILL. They are taking advantage of me by being absent, for if they were here I might be able to persuade them. [Laughter.]

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. COMPTON. I have been waiting patiently for the gentleman from South Carolina to address himself to the merits of this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The merits of the bill are so plain they do not need any explanation. The object is to prohibit book-making and pool-selling upon horse-races and elections or any other contest. This law is simply in conformity to the laws which prevail in a majority of the States of the Union, and it is merely a question whether the people who live in the District of Columbia shall be subjected to more temptation than the people who live in the States of the Union. We here must legislate for this people. We are the only body they have to look to for encouragement in morality, and we should do for them what the Legislatures of the States do for the people in those States.

We submitted the bill to the District commissioners, who are in a measure protectors of the public welfare and in a limited sense of the public morals of this place. They approved it unanimously, with the suggestion, however, that there should be twice a year, of one week's duration each, a time when the jockey club, which has a track not far removed from the city, should have the privilege of selling pools on horse-races there.

The committee, however, thought that if it was to be of any benefit at all there should not be any special privileges granted to any one particular class or association; and therefore they did not accept the suggestion of the commissioners, and reported the bill as it is. They believe the bill will commend itself to the good sense of the House, and that the morality which distinguishes members of Congress they will endeavor to inculcate by suitable legislation. I think that the bill has merits and should pass, and I do not know that we will ever have a better time to do this than in the absence of everybody who is supposed to be opposed to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will warn the gentleman from South Carolina that owing to the races now being in progress there is not a quorum present, and if he presses the bill it might not pass.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I think it quite unfair in my friend from South Carolina, who is a very liberal and fair-minded man I know, to want to call the bill up at this particular time. If I may be allowed, sir, to characterize distinguished statesmen, members of this House, as "good fellows," I desire to say that the good fellows who like myself are opposed to the bill are practicing to-day what I want to preach. [Laughter.]

I do not propose to go into any argument on the merits of the bill at this time. I am opposed to it and have stated my objections fully in the committee, but do not propose to state them fully here otherwise than to say simply this: Appreciating the fact that this bill belongs to that class of legislation in which I do not believe, legislation which seeks to make men moral by force, I am opposed to it on principle, and shall fight it at every stage of its passage through the House.

I move that the bill do lie on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COMPTON, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 59.

Mr. COMPTON. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If this point is to be insisted upon I will ask the House to pass the bill over. I do not desire to take any advantage of the absence of those gentlemen to whom the gentleman from Maryland refers, and ask that the bill be passed over for the present, if that is a parliamentary proceeding.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to move to postpone the bill until the second Monday in next month.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then I make that motion.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 59, noes 9.

Mr. KING. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will ask my friend from Louisiana not to insist upon that point. The bill will be called up for consideration at the regular time. There are a number of other bills here which are likely to lead to no controversy and should be passed to day, if possible, and we will lose the entire day if the point of order is insisted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. KING and Mr. HEMPHILL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 5.

Mr. KING. I shall not insist upon the point of order.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was agreed to, and the consideration of the bill was postponed as indicated.

PUNISHMENT FOR ADVERTISING LOTTERY TICKETS.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House bill No. 7880, to punish the advertising of lottery tickets in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful within the District of Columbia for any person to advertise or publish an advertisement of any lottery scheme, or any other scheme or game of chance, or for the sale of any lottery ticket or tickets, or any interest therein, or the sale of any ticket or tickets in any other scheme or game of chance, or any interest therein, in any newspaper, circular, handbill, or poster, or in any other way.

SEC. 2. That any person violating any provision of the foregoing section shall be prosecuted therefor in the police court of said District, and if found guilty shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500 nor less than $100, or be imprisoned in the jail of said District for a period not exceeding six months nor less than one month, or both so fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 75, noes 2.

Mr. BENNETT. No quorum.

Mr. GLASS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that point.

Mr. BENNETT. I can not do it. It is an infringement upon liberty. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BENNETT and Mr. HEMPHILL were appointed tellers.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to inquire if a motion to adjourn would be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is always in order.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose the gentleman who makes the point of order will adhere to it, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEARD. I hope that motion will not prevail.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 28, noes 46.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places.

The question recurs upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that we have not a quorum here, and it is not worth while to go through the same form that we did awhile ago in order to determine that fact. Under the circumstances, if I may do it, I ask that the bill be postponed until the second Monday in June next. I make that motion.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 50, noes 29.

Mr. STORM. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If that point is going to be insisted upon I ask to withdraw my motion, because we may as well have the question directly upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time as upon the pending motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to withdraw the motion.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, on which tellers have been ordered.

Mr. GROUT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 4, not voting 158; as follows:

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. KING. I have just received a dispatch from my friend from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON], who is at the races, and begs to be excused from voting on this roll-call. [Laughter.]

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.
Mr. DUNN with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. FORNEY with Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska.
Mr. CURTIN with Mr. NEGLEY.
Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. FARQUHAR.
Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. GALLINGER.
Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. GILFILLAN.
Mr. FISHER with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.
Mr. BURNES with Mr. BUCHANAN.
Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. CRAIN with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.
Mr. COLE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.
Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. PIRCE
Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.
Mr. HUDD with Mr. FLEEGER.
Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. CASWELL.
Mr. CARLETON with Mr. HOLMES.

For this day:

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. FUNSTON.
Mr. BRAGG with Mr. HAYDEN.
Mr. WILKINS with Mr. MCCOMAS.
Mr. TAULBEE with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. OATES with Mr. WHITING.
Mr. ROGERS with Mr. BRUMM.
Mr. REESE with Mr. STRUBLE.
Mr. HARRIS with Mr. HOUK.
Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. CANNON.
Mr. PINDAR with Mr. LA FOLLETTE.
Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. HAYNES.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. ATKINSON.
Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. CONGER.
Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.
Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. PAYNE.
Mr. NEECE with Mr. MOFFATT.
Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, with Mr. LIBBEY.
Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, with Mr. LEHLBACH.
Mr. DAWSON with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.
Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. PHELPS.
Mr. FREDERICK with Mr. PAYSON.
Mr. BLISS with Mr. WOODBURN.
Mr. HUTTON with Mr. HIRES.

Mr. DUNHAM with Mr. WISE.
Mr. HANBACK with Mr. SNYDER.
Mr. HALSELL with Mr. THOMPSON.
Mr. JONES, of Texas, with Mr. MILLARD.
Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, with Mr. MILLS.
Mr. COBB with Mr. KETCHAM.
Mr. WAKEFIELD with Mr. BYNUM.

Mr. DUNHAM. The Clerk has read a pair between Mr. WISE, of Virginia, and myself. I understood that pair was only on the bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. The pair, then, should not have been announced.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I am paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BURLEIGH], with the understanding that I might vote to make a quorum.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the Chair allow me to inquire if on the vote just taken there is a quorum without my name?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. It has been and is now an open question as to whether or not it requires a majority of all the members who might be elected under the law to the House to constitute a quorum, or merely a majority of those who are members of the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I make the inquiry because I was paired with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. Under the circumstances, to make a quorum, I voted; also for the additional reason that I believe had the gentleman from Texas been present he would have voted as I did.

Mr. SINGLETON. I desire to say that before the conclusion of the call of the roll I was called out. If I had been present I would have voted in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated; and the bill, being engrossed, was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 6.

Mr. BENNETT. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BURLEIGH, of New York, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DUNN, indefinitely, on account of the serious illness of a member of his family.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House of Representatives that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1065) granting a pension to Emeline J. Babson;

A bill (S. 1105) granting the right of way to the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company through the arsenal grounds at Bridesburg, Pa.; and

A bill (S. 2187) for the relief of Rebecca E. Haskins.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and there were—yeas 167, nays 3, not voting 152; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. I object.

The following additional pair was announced.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. LAIRD, for the rest of this day.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague Mr. CANDLER is absent on account of illness in his family.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON REFORM IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. Not for present consideration?

Mr. COX. Not for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service of the investigation of the appropriation of Jeffersonville (Ind.) levees.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. That can be done only by unanimous consent, as it is not now before the House for consideration.

Mr. BARBOUR. I object, Mr. Speaker. I insist upon proceeding with the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The report will be printed and laid over, subject to be called up at any time, as it is a privileged matter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Then I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the report may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. W. J. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the views of the minority, to be printed with the report of the committee. I think I can submit them by Wednesday or Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman will have three days within which to present the views of the minority.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to whom was referred the resolution directing an inquiry into the charges against certain officers of the House of Representatives in connection with the appropriation of $50,000 by the Forty-eighth Congress to what is known as the Jeffersonville (Ind.) levee, beg leave to report as follows:

That your committee met on the 2d day of April, 1886, and proceeded to discharge the duties imposed upon them by the House by its resolution adopted on the 16th of March last, which reads as follows:

"Whereas there was pending in the Forty-eighth Congress a bill containing, among other matters, an appropriation of $50,000 for a certain improvement of the Ohio River at or near Jeffersonville, Ind., known as the Jeffersonville levee appropriation; and

"Whereas it is charged by a reputable citizen of Indiana that during the pendency of said measure a person or persons, then officers of the House of Representatives, exacted, collected, and accepted from a person or persons interested in the success of the said appropriation a large sum of money upon the pretense or for the purpose of influencing Congress, or some committee thereof, or Members or Senators in their official action thereon; and

"Whereas it is also charged that the person or persons so exacting, collecting, and accepting said sum of money for the purpose aforesaid are officers and employés of this House: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the truth of said charges and report the facts to this House; and to enable the said committee to thoroughly investigate said charges, it is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers; and a sum sufficient to defray the necessary expenses of this inquiry is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House."

That they have examined twenty witnesses, whose testimony is herewith sent. That the facts extracted from this evidence appear to be as follows:

The city of Jeffersonville, Ind., took action on the 6th day of February, 1884, looking to its protection against overflows in times of freshets in the Ohio River. The council passed a resolution in favor of the passage by Congress of a bill with this object in view, and on the 12th day of February, 1884, appointed a committee, consisting of Messrs. Jonas G. Howard, William H. Fogg, and A. O. Clark, to go to Washington city to urge upon Congress the improvement of levees at that city. This committee visited Washington and returned about the 3d day of March.

Prior to this time the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors had completed its work, and the visiting committee was informed by Mr. WILLIS, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that they would have to make their effort to secure an appropriation in the Senate.

The visiting committee then interviewed Senators VOORHEES and HARRISON, and these gentlemen immediately took steps to secure an appropriation, the former by the introduction of an amendment designed to be offered to the river and harbor bill when it should come from the House, and the latter by the introduction of a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for necessary information respecting the desired improvement. The action of this visiting committee and that of Senators VOORHEES and HARRISON were the really influential factors in obtaining the legislation which secured the appropriation for the levee at Jeffersonville.

The result of the passage of the resolution of Senator HARRISON was a report by the local engineer, Colonel Merrill, dated April 19, 1884, which was transmitted by the Secretary of War to the Senate on the 12th day of May, 1884.

On the 22d day of April, 1884, three days after the date of Colonel Merrill's report, the council of the city of Jeffersonville appointed a committee, consisting of the same persons included in the original committee, to visit Washington in the interest of an appropriation. Messrs. Howard and Fogg declined to come, and Mr. Simeon Goldbach was substituted, and he and Mr. Clark came to Washington the latter part of April and remained about two weeks.

This committee did but little, and in fact there was but little for them to do, because the matter was in the care of Senators VOORHEES and HARRISON; but, as it appears by the evidence introduced in behalf of Messrs. Warder and Stealey, the last visiting committee left matters in their charge, they being citizens of Jeffersonville and then and now employés of the House of Representatives.

Upon the return of this second committee to Jeffersonville in the early part of May, by the instructions of the levee committee of the city council Mr. A. O. Shuler, secretary, wrote to Mr. L. F. Warder, asking his advice as to the propriety of sending another committee to Washington. Shortly thereafter Mr. Warder wrote to the parties interested at Jeffersonville that he had secured the services of an attorney, influential friend, or competent person, there being a conflict of evidence as to which term was used, to attend to this matter, and had made a contract with him, by which the said person was to be paid $250 cash and $1,000 additional in the event of the success of the measure; and he stated further in his communications that it was utterly useless to send committees to Washington, but that the $250 should be forwarded to Mr. O. O. Stealey, which was done by Mr. Shuler.

From the time of these communications, in the early part of May, up to the time when the river and harbor bill had finally passed the Senate, the evidence fails to disclose anything that Mr. Warder did except to speak perhaps occasionally to Senators VOORHEES and HARRISON and frequently to Mr. Stealey, about the appropriation.

Mr. Warder testifies that in these conversations with Mr. Stealey he informed him that he purposed and afterward had employed a Mr. Hill as an attorney to look after the appropriation. He said nothing whatever, according to his own testimony, to either Senators VOORHEES or HARRISON, to Mr. Stockslager, his Representative, who took great interest in the matter, or to any other person, excepting Mr. Stealey, prior to the adjournment of Congress, of this employment of Hill.

Mr. Warder claims in his testimony that he referred to Mr. Hill when he wrote the communication to Shuler asking for money, but, as heretofore stated, he did not name him in that communication.

Mr. Warder went upon the witness stand before your committee in his own defense, and when asked why and how he came to employ Hill, stated:

"Now, I want to state here the reason, or one of the reasons, why I employed Mr. Hill. I had become acquainted with him around the House. I saw him frequently about the House there, often before Congress met, and that he was associating around with members of Congress, and we got up a talking acquaintance. It was just on the eve of a political national contest, and through and about it I became acquainted with him and found him to be the best posted man on the subject of levees and improvements that I had talked with in Congress or out of Congress. That was another reason that induced me to employ this man. I did employ him on a contingent fee, with the understanding that I should pay him $250. If the appropriation failed, that to be the end of it. If the appropriation was a success and we obtained it, he was to have $1,000 contingent fee. To make the matter short, we obtained the appropriation. I paid him the $1,000. That ended our connection, and, gentlemen, that is, without going into specific details, about my explanation of the matter."

The foregoing is the voluntary statement of Mr. Warder in regard to the employment of Hill. Upon cross-examination he stated:

"Q. Did you say that Mr. Hill was a lawyer?

"A. I understood him to be an attorney at law.

"Q. Well, do you know whether he is a lawyer or not?

"A. Yes, sir; I might say I know he is a lawyer.

"Q. Is he engaged in any other business?

"A. Not that I know of. The reason I might say I know he is a lawyer, is that he has or had a lawyer's office. He told me that he was a Washington attorney, and practicing before the Supreme Court of the United States, and I had no right to doubt what he told me.

"Q. Your acquaintance had been about how long before this employment?

"A. A month or two, or three.

"Q. By whom was he first introduced to you?

"A. I don't remember, Mr. BAYNE, that there was any introduction at all, as far as that was concerned.

"Q. How long had you met him before this employment?

"A. Oh, quite frequently. I don't know what he was engaged in, but he seemed to have some business here, as he came to the House quite often.

"Q. Were your meetings with him there?

"A. I met him around my desk and in the Hall of the House, and in the corridors and lobbies.

"Q. Had he been recommended to you by anybody?

"A. No, sir; I don't remember that he was recommended by anybody.

* * * * * * *

"Q. Did you consult with anybody at all about employing him?

"A. I consulted with Mr. Stealey.

"Q. With anybody else?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. What was Mr. Stealey's advice in reference to his employment?

"A. Mr. Stealey thought I had better employ him.

"Q. Did Mr. Stealey know Mr. Hill?

"A. I do not know whether he did before that time or not.

"Q. Did he know him at all?

"A. I don't know whether he did or not.

"Q. Did you consult with anybody else in reference to it?

"A. I did not.

"Q. Did you mention, in any of the communications which you wrote the people of Jeffersonville, or to the committees who visited Washington, the name of Mr. Hill as the party whom you had employed?

"A. I did not see any of the committees that visited Washington until after Congress adjourned.

"When did you mention the fact outside of Mr. Stealey that Mr. Hill had been employed?

"A. Well, when I went home after the adjournment of Congress I spoke with several parties.

* * * * * * *

"Q. Who introduced you to him?

"A. No one that I remember.

"Q. You just struck up an acquaintance with him?

"A. Yes, sir; a casual acquaintance.

"Q. Did you inquire into his standing, reliability, capacity, or anything of that sort previous to his employment?

"A. No, sir; because upon my own judgment of his capacity I was satisfied upon that score.

"Q. Did you post yourself as to whether he had any influence in connection with any matter before Congress, or likely to be?

"A. I did not. I believe he told me he had connection with some matters, but I forget what they were, but it was in a legal way. I believe he said this, that he was paid $2,500 fee for writing a brief that did not take him three days."

Now, it is in evidence that Mr. Warder was at one time mayor of the city of Jeffersonville, at another time he had taken an active part in promoting legislation by the State of Indiana for the removal of the county site to Jeffersonville, and in his own language, "was in it up to my (his) ears for three years." He had been an officer of the House of Representatives since the first Monday in December, 1883. He, therefore, had considerable experience in public affairs. In addition to this he exhibited as a witness the characteristics and traits of an intelligent man of the world.

The person, Mr. E. N. Hill, whom he alleges he employed as an attorney, has been discreditably connected with a number of public affairs. Mr. Warder did not put him upon the witness stand, although advised and defended by able and learned counsel, but the committee did.

He testified that he was employed by Warder; that he received $250 at one time, and $1,000 at another; that he put the money in his pocket; that he kept no bank account; that he gave receipts, which were produced in evidence; but he declined to state what he did with the money, except to say generally that he used it as he needed it. He was asked if he was an attorney, and he answered that he was licensed by the Supreme Court of the United States, but had never practiced in that court. He was asked if he had practiced in the courts of the District of Columbia; he replied he never had. He was asked in what courts he did practice, and he replied in the Court of Claims and before the Departments, but when questioned as to cases he had or was interested in, he failed to indicate more than two or three.

Your committee find, further, that the manner of Mr. Hill upon the witness stand, together with the character of his evidence and his antecedents, are such that they are disposed to place but little credence in any statements made by him which are not fully corroborated by extraneous circumstances, and that he is hardly the man whom an intelligent person would employ to conduct or manage an important business.

According to his own testimony and also that of Mr. Warder, Hill rendered no effective service whatever in securing the appropriation for Jeffersonville. He appeared before no committee, importuned no Congressman or Senator, did absolutely nothing except to advise Mr. Warder to make the fight in the Senate, and that the appropriation should be asked in aid of navigation and protection to Government property and not to protect the city of Jeffersonville from inundation. Action had been pending in the Senate for two and a half months prior to the alleged employment of Hill, as has been shown, and all measures proposed looked to the protection of Government property; this was particularly shown by the bill introduced by Mr. Stockslager on April 4, 1885, five weeks prior to the alleged employment of Hill.

In the face of these facts, Mr. Warder testifies that he paid Hill $250 as a retainer and $1,000 after the approval of the bill by the President. This $1,000, it appears, was sent from Jeffersonville in response to the following dispatch sent by Warder:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2, 1884—9.45 a. m.

Mr. A. O. SHULER, Jeff.:

We expect to adjourn Saturday. Send draft to me at once, so that I will not be detained here. It is all right; but I will not pay until the bill is signed.

L. F. WARDER.

And, according to the testimony of Warder and Hill, was paid to the latter on the 6th of July, 1884.

In this connection it is proper to state that throughout this investigation on the part of the committee, and notwithstanding the fact that several parties from Jeffersonville friendly to Mr. Warder, who stated that they had talked with him on the subject, both at Jeffersonville after the appropriation had been secured and in Washington after they had reached here under subpœna from the committee, were placed on the stand and questioned closely with a view of ascertaining the name of the attorney or influential party who had been employed by Warder, the committee were unable to ascertain it, and it was not until Mr. Warder had been called to the witness stand by his counsel to testify in his own behalf that the name of the party so employed was divulged.

The alleged employment of such a man as Hill under the circumstances described, and the payment to him of so large a fee for so trivial a service, is to the minds of your committee a doubtful and improbable transaction. But in any event the fact that Mr. Warder suggested that money should be raised, coupled with the fact that he received it under the pretense of securing legislation, is, they think, quite sufficient to justify decisive action on the part of the House of Representatives.

Such conduct on the part of an officer of the House is productive of scandal and reproach, and leads to erroneous impressions regarding the character and integrity of those charged with the legislation of the country.

While the testimony establishes that no part of the $1,250 paid by the people of Jeffersonville was used or attempted to be used in corruptly influencing any member of either branch of the Forty-eighth Congress, your committee wish to put the most emphatic condemnation upon the practice of an employé of Congress having anything to do with the reception and payment of money the consideration of which is the promotion of legislation. In this view of the case the conduct of Mr. Warder in connection with the affair, even if honest and straightforward, deserves unqualified disapproval.

In view of all the facts in the case your committee find that L. F. Warder, then and now an employé of the House of Representatives, did receive the sum of $1,250 from certain persons interested in the success of the Jeffersonville, Ind., levee appropriation, pending in the Forty-eighth Congress, upon the pretense of influencing Congress in connection therewith, and they recommend that L. F. Warder be dismissed from the service of this House.

The only other employé of the House of Representatives in any way connected with the charge under investigation is Mr. O. O. Stealey. It appears that Mr. Stealey was cognizant of the employment of Hill and loaned Mr. Warder the sum of $250 for that alleged purpose, which sum was repaid Mr. Stealey by the citizens of Jeffersonville. While Mr. Stealey did this, however, he explains his connection with the transaction as follows:

"Q. Mr. Stealey, please tell the committee what connection you had with procuring this levee appropriation for Jeffersonville, when you first undertook it, and all about it.

"A. I am a citizen and tax-payer of Jeffersonville; all my interests are there, and my family lives there. They had floods there in 1883 and in 1884, which destroyed the town pretty much, and I was asked by friends to assist here in Washington in securing this appropriation, which I did. I went to Senator HARRISON frequently, and I went to Senator VOORHEES and to members of the House, and did all that man could do for his town in that respect."

* * * * * * *

"Q. Something was said about you having paid out $250.

"A. I loaned Mr. Warder $250.

"Q. What was that for?

"A. He told me at the time that he wanted to or had employed an attorney. I asked him who the man was, and he said it was Hill. I then asked him what he knew about the man and was he a good man, and he said, 'I think so; I talked to him, and he seems to have a good idea of legislation.' I then asked him where the money was to come from, and he answered, 'Prominent taxpayers want this done, and I am authorized by Mr. Goldbach to employ an attorney, or some man to watch this bill.'

"Q. Did you tell him you could not give it much attention?

"I told him so distinctly and positively. I was away a good deal of the time; I was two weeks in Chicago, and from the latter part of May until the 3d of June I was away from Washington, and from the latter part of June until the middle of July I was not here. And during that time no letter was written and no dispatch sent by me, and I had no communication whatever in any manner connected with the money or the employment of an attorney, except with Mr. Warder; and that was to let him have $250, which Mr. Shuler sent me a draft for in about six weeks. That ended my connection here with the whole business, except my personal efforts among members of the House and Senators."

Now, though in the opinion of your committee it is improper for any officer or employé of the House of Representatives to undertake by his own efforts or those of his agents to influence legislation in Congress, yet, so far as the present inquiry is concerned, your committee find that O. O. Stealey did not exact, collect, or accept from any person any sum of money upon the pretense or for the purpose of influencing Congress, or any committee thereof, or any Member or Senator, in connection with the Jeffersonville levee appropriation, and except the impropriety of an employé being concerned in any attempt to secure such an appropriation, said Stealey was not connected therewith.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

RESOLUTION TO ACCOMPANY REPORT.

Resolved, That L. F. Warder be dismissed from the service of this House.

LOTS IN SQUARE 635, WASHINGTON.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order now to proceed with the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask that the House take up Senate bill No. 1020, in relation to certain lots and alleys.

The SPEAKER. That bill is in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill, and to consider the same in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia, in their discretion, are hereby authorized and empowered to convey to the owner of lots 6 and 7, in square 635, in the city of Washington, D. C., the alley, 15 feet wide, running east and west between said lots, and comprising an area of 3,480 square feet of ground, and to vacate and close up said alley: Provided, That said owner shall appropriate for public use as an alley the north half of lot 5, in said square, being 29 feet wide, and comprising an area of 4,350 square feet of ground.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to cede to the owners of lots 6 and 7 the alley which now divides those lots, and which is 15 feet in width, in consideration of the fact that said owners shall cede to the District or dedicate to public use other portions of one of said lots or adjoining lots, making an alley 30 feet in width. The purpose of the owners of said lot is to procure the abolition of the alley in order that they may use the two lots for the purpose of erecting thereon a building for which there is not room on the lots as they now stand. In other words, they propose to set back the alley a distance of 48 feet, and to make an alley 30 feet wide in place of the 15-foot alley vacated, and which the District commissioners are hereby authorized to cede. While it will be for the benefit of the owners of these lots, it will also be a benefit to the public by giving an easement of twice the width of the present alley removed back about 48 feet. The commissioners report to the committee that they favor the change. That is all I desire to submit in connection with this bill.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. This city was laid out many years ago upon an approved plan, and that plan comprises a system of streets, avenues, and alleys. I would like to know from the gentleman in charge of this bill whether this proposed concession looks to an arbitrary change in any respect of the plan of this portion of the city?

Mr. HEARD. I will say to the gentleman that it does not; that the alley for which this bill provides will have connection with the same streets that the existing alley connects with. The bill will make no change in the plan, and it is recommended by the commissioners.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ST. PATRICK'S CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up the bill (H. R. 5509) for the relief of St. Patrick's church in the city of Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it now be considered in the House.

Objection was made.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask that House bill No. 5509 be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the congregation of St. Patrick's church in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, be permitted to pay the general taxes in arrears upon lots numbered from 36 to 46, both inclusive, in square numbered 376, in the said city of Washington, for the years from June 30, 1874, to June 30, 1880, without the interest, penalties, and costs that have accrued thereon; and that upon the payment of said principal sum of the taxes, all interest, penalties, and costs that have accrued thereon be remitted and released by the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask that the report in this case, which is short and explains fully the merits of the bill, be read.

The report (by Mr. BARBOUR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5509) for the relief of St. Patrick's church, in the District of Columbia, have had the same under consideration, and report thereon as follows:

In 1804 lots 5, 6, 7, and 8, in square No. 376, were conveyed in trust for the use of the congregation of St. Patrick's church; a church was soon afterward erected, and was used continually as such until 1870, when the building was declared unsafe, and thereupon the congregation met in another building in the same inclosure until a new church building could be erected. The old building was demolished in 1872, and shortly afterward a new building was commenced on the rear portion of said lots, and the front portion was subdivided with a view to sale if the trust could be removed. In 1882 a decree was had from the supreme court of the District authorizing the sale of said portion of the lots, and then, for the first time, the said portion, which had been subdivided into smaller lots, was devoted to secular and not to religious purposes. No taxes were levied or assessed against said lots till 1874, and under the city ordinances and the laws of the United States they had been exempted from taxation by the authorities of the city and District.

In 1878 or 1879 the tax bills against said lots were sent to the pastor of the church, and on his going to the office of the tax collector he was informed that said bills were sent as a matter of form, and was led to believe that the lots were still regarded as church property, and not subject to taxation. In 1880, when it was considered that the property was thenceforward devoted to secular purposes, the pastor paid the taxes for the current year, and has ever since paid the same promptly. And not until 1882 did the congregation or pastor ascertain that taxes had been regularly assessed against said lots since June 30, 1874, and that the property had been frequently sold for taxes and bid in by the District of Columbia.

The committee think that the church has acted in good faith throughout, and that upon the payment of the taxes in arrears, from June 30, 1874, to June 30, 1880 (since which time they have been regularly paid), it should be relieved from the interest, penalties, and costs that have accrued thereon.

They therefore report the bill back to the House, and ask that the same be passed.

Mr. BARBOUR. This bill only asks that the penalties, interest, and costs resulting from the non-payment of these taxes be remitted. The taxes themselves are to be paid under the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What is the amount which will be remitted?

Mr. BARBOUR. I can not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. BEACH. The amount can not be very much.

Mr. KING. For what uses has this property been employed—for religious purposes?

Mr. BARBOUR. The property was originally exempt from taxation under its character as church property. Afterward when the church concluded to sell a portion of the property to be used for secular purposes they were prepared to pay their taxes. But being informed that the taxes were not assessed against them, they did not attend to the matter as they would otherwise have done; and hence certain penalties, interest, and costs were incurred. They now ask to be allowed to pay the taxes without payment of the penalties, interest, and costs.

Mr. KING. That is all right.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

ST. MARK'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up a bill of similar character to that just passed, but for the benefit of another church. It is the bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act a certain piece of land, situated in the city of Washington, D. C., known as lots 9 and and 11, in square 788 of the plan of that city, and occupied by the church known as St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, and all the buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto and used in connection therewith in the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assesments, national, municipal, or county; and all taxes, together with the interest and penalties, now due and unpaid upon said property, shall be, and they are hereby, remitted.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BARBOUR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia, have had the same under consideration, and report thereon as follows, adopting as their own the report of the same committee in the Forty-eighth Congress:

"The congregation of St. Mark's parish is small, and consists mostly of persons of moderate income—some being poor and none wealthy—and they are illy able to pay the taxes outstanding against their property—the lots referred to in the bill. They now occupy a small wooden building, near and adjoining, for and as their place of worship. The seats now are and will remain free.

"The taxes, penalties, and interest are outstanding and unpaid from 1872 to the present time. The lots were purchased by the vestry of St. Marks's parish in the year 1870, and were purchased for the sole and only purpose of erecting a church thereon. In 1881 they laid the foundation of a church building, covering the whole of said lots, but have not completed said church edifice for the reason that they have been pecuniarily unable to do so. It has, in fact, been with great labor and sacrifice that they have paid the purchase-money for said lots.

"The committee think that said lots have been purchased solely for the purpose of erecting thereon a church for the use of said St. Mark's Episcopal church, and said church having proceeded with said work as rapidly as their pecuniary ability would permit, and not having been utilized by them, or attempted to be, for profit, that the same has been occupied and used by them since their said purchase.

"The committee report the bill back to the House, and ask that the same be passed."

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, having had under consideration bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, had directed him to report back favorably the bills (H. R. 5509) for the relief of St. Patrick's church, in the city of Washington, D. C., and the bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia.

ST. PATRICK'S CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5509) for the relief of St. Patrick's church, in the city of Washington, D. C., reported from the Committee of the Whole House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ST. MARK'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, D. C.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN HOME.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up the bill (H. R. 7083) to incorporate the trustees of the Young Women's Christian Home, in Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GAY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

Mr. BARBOUR. I hope there will be no objection to that.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Mary G. Wilkinson, Benjamin H. Warder, Octavius Knight, Thomas P. Morgan, Eliza N. Blair, Emma E. Dorsey, Nathaniel Wilson, Francis H. Smith, A. J. Falls, R. D. Mussey, E. D. Powell, Caroline M. Lawrence, Frances E. Childs, H. A. Hall, Elphonzo Youngs, Addison M. Smith, and their associates and successors, be, and they are hereby, constituted a body politic and corporate in law by the name and style of the "Trustees of Young Woman's Christian Home;" and by that name may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, have perpetual succession, and shall and may take, hold, manage, and dispose of, at all times, real and personal estate, and shall and may do and perform all other acts and things necessary or appropriate for the execution of the purposes, charities, and trusts for which the said corporation is created, and which are set forth in the second section of this act; and said corporation shall have power to adopt and make such constitution, by-laws, and regulations as may be appropriate and necessary for carrying out the purposes of the said incorporation, including provisions for the election of trustees and other officers and agents of the corporation, the filling of vacancies occurring in such offices and agencies, the taking, holding, and management of the property of the corporation, and the sale and conveyance thereof, when necessary, for the purposes of such corporation, and the transaction of all other business appropriate and necessary to the purposes of such incorporation, with power to adopt and use a common seal for such corporation, and the same to alter at pleasure.

SEC. 2. That the object, purposes, and powers of said corporation shall be, and the same are hereby, limited to providing temporary home for young women coming to and being in the District of Columbia who shall from any cause be in want of and willing to accept temporary home, care, and assistance in the said District, and for the purposes aforesaid the said corporation shall have power to take, hold, use, and enjoy all such real and personal property, endowments, and contributions, whether by devise, gift, or otherwise, as may be appropriate for the establishment, maintenance, and success of the said institution, and also to acquire, take, hold, use, occupy, manage, and own, either in fee-simple or by lease or otherwise, such real estate in the said District not exceeding in its appraised value the sum of $200,000, to be used, held, occupied, and enjoyed for the purposes of such home and for the residence and use of the proper and necessary officers, employés, and agents of such corporation: Provided, That the property, whether real or personal, owned by the said corporation and used exclusively for the charitable purposes of the said organization shall be exempt from taxation.

Mr. BEACH. Is there no general law under which these persons can obtain the corporate rights which they are seeking?

Mr. GAY. This corporation is for a benevolent purpose; and there is no general law under which the property of the corporation can be exempted from taxation. The object of this special bill is to secure such exemption.

Mr. BEACH. Then this is a special privilege to these benevolent persons?

Mr. GAY. Yes, sir. The object is a very meritorious one.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the passage of the bill). In the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" have it.

Mr. BENNETT. I call for a division. I have only succeeded within a few moments in getting a copy of this bill. I find at the close of it this provision:

Provided, That the property, whether real or personal, owned by the said corporation, and used exclusively for the charitable purposes of the said organization, shall be exempt from taxation.

It is for that reason I have called for a division.

The question being again taken, there were 74 in the affirmative, 1 in the negative.

Mr. BENNETT. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. GAY. I demand the yeas and nays at once. I presume that is the only way we can get a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 145, nay 1, not voting 176; as follows:

YEAS—145.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 11, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DECORATION DAY CEREMONIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE POTOMAC,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
GRAND ARMY HALL, CORNER NINTH AND D STREETS N. W.,
Washington, D. C., May 10, 1886.

SIR: The executive committee on memorial services have the honor to extend to you, and through you to the Senators of the Forty-ninth Congress, a most cordial invitation to unite with the comrades of this department in the ceremonies in honor of their deceased comrades, at Arlington, Va., on Monday, the 31st instant.

Very respectfully,

S. E. FAUNCE,
Assistant Adjutant-General and Secretary.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I present the memorial of the Republican central committee of the State of Ohio, certified by James E. Lowry, chairman, and Joshua K. Brown, secretary, charging that the election of HENRY B. PAYNE to the Senate of the United States was secured by bribery, fraud, and corruption, and requesting the Senate of the United States to investigate such charges, &c. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of various religious bodies, residents of New York city and vicinity, praying Congress to take into consideration certain allegations of outrage perpetrated upon the Chinese, and also praying that indemnity be at once granted for the grievous injuries done to the Chinese at Rock Springs.

I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A bill in relation to that matter having been reported, and made a special order, the petition will lie on the table, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. I also present the report of a meeting held in Steinway Hall, New York city, April 5, 1886, to protest against the Chinese outrages, George F. Seward, chairman, and R. Bassett, secretary, which accompanied the petition, and I was requested to present it with that. I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of citizens of Millbury, Mass., praying Congress to enact the provisions contained in the bill concerning oleomargarine reported by the House Committee on Agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Durango, Colo., praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement, and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Herbert Myrick, of Springfield, Mass., praying for legislation to prevent the manufacture of oleomargarine and other imitations of butter. Mr. Myrick wishes it to be understood that in signing this petition as the editor of the New England Homestead he represents thirty thousand farmers, and as the editor of the Farm and Home he represents one hundred and fifty thousand farmers. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I also present a like petition of Luther A. Cole and a large number of actual farmers of the town of Cheshire, State of Massachusetts, for the same purpose. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of M. F. Remington and 28 other citizens of Hinesburg, Vt.; four petitions numerously signed by citizens of Fairfield, Vt., and the petition of J. B. Sanderson and 58 other citizens of Highgate, Vt., praying for legislation taxing imitation and adulterated butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Nancy R. Gould, of Rutland, Vt., with accompanying papers, praying for an additional pension for her invalid and helpless dependent daughter; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Mary E. Woodward, of Montpelier, Vt., widow of James B. Woodward, M. D., late surgeon of the Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of the Vermont annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying Congress to take measures to protect the subjects of the Emperor of China, who may be lawfully established in this country, from violence and wrong. The bill on that subject having been reported, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of citizens of Wallingford, Conn., and a petition of citizens of Meriden and vicinity, in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of a bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EVARTS presented a memorial of 350 Knights of Labor of Cohoes, N. Y., and a petition of 149 Knights of Labor of Bolivar, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EVARTS. I present a petition of the officers of certain military organizations of New York State, praying for a change of Inauguration

Day from March 4 to April 30. A measure to that effect having been reported, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of S. C. Wilson, mayor, A. M. Landis, chief of police, Dr. J. T. Criswell, C. L. Herman, Dr. A. F. Brandt, Dr. J. P. Seiler, and many other leading and prominent citizens of Harrisburg, Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, praying for legislation extending the powers of the National Board of Health; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

He also presented a petition of citizens of New Berlin and Lewisburg, Pa., and a petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the redemption of the trade-dollar; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Granges No. 56, No. 786, and No. 405, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania, praying for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented memorials of Granges No. 56 and No. 405, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the admission free of duty of all agricultural raw materials; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALL. I present the petition of David E. Youmans and other citizens of Manatee County, Florida, to the following effect:

We, the undersigned, citizens of Manatee County, Florida, hold that seven-tenths of the selection of June 13, 1885, are not swamp and overflowed lands within the meaning of that act.

They further hold that "said selection was not made for the purposes intended in the act, but was made by speculators and swindlers for their own selfish benefit." They further state that they can prove that actual settlers who had lived on the public lands as long as six years, and others who had lived three years, and who had paid the wages of United States surveyors twice to have their homes surveyed, and others who had their duplicate homestead and pre-emption receipts, and who had as much as from $75 to $5,000 invested in improvements, were improperly and ruthlessly located out of their lands; and the petitioners say they can prove, and are eager for a trial and an opportunity to do so, that not one-third of the lands, no, not one-fifth of the lands, selected on the 13th of June, 1885, are swamp and overflowed within the meaning of the grant.

I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY presented a petition of colored citizens of Grayson and other counties in the State of Texas, praying that an appropriation be made to aid them in emigrating to Liberia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GIBSON. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of New Orleans in favor of the passage of a bankruptcy law as amended and passed by the Senate of the United States last year. They say that the commercial interests of the whole country, and particularly of the Southern States, demand that a bankruptcy act, equitable both to the debtor and the creditor, should be enacted without delay. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I also present another petition of the Chamber of Commerce of New Orleans, praying for the establishment of closer commercial relations with Brazil and the countries of South America, Mexico, and Central America, and giving liberal aid to steamship lines between those countries and our own. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL presented two memorials of Patrons of Husbandry of New Jersey, remonstrating against the admission free of duty of all agricultural raw materials; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented two petitions of Patrons of Husbandry of New Jersey, praying for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of citizens of Gerry, N. Y., a petition of citizens of Alder Creek, N. Y., and a petition of farmers of Summerdale, N. Y., praying for the passage of a law taxing imitation butter at 10 cents a pound; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Amsterdam, N. Y., praying for the passage of a law for the redemption of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of John Lacey, of Churubusco, N. Y., praying for the passage of a law extending the time for filing pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN. I present a petition numerously signed by leading business men of Baltimore, praying Congress to pass an act for the redemption of the trade-dollar, stating in effect that because of the withdrawal of the one and two dollar notes the trade-dollars are being forced into circulation, and resembling so much the standard dollar they are being placed in the hands of laboring men greatly to their detriment. The petition is signed by a number of leading business men. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Joseph Shipley and members of Labor Assembly No. 1649 of the Knights of Labor of Baltimore, Md.; the petition of William H. Marriner and members of Labor Assembly No. 1384 of the Knights of Labor of Baltimore, Md.; and the petition of John F. Logsdon and members of Labor Assembly No. 767 of the Knights of Labor of Baltimore, Md., praying Congress to make liberal appropriations for sundry works of internal improvement; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SABIN presented a petition of the Minneapolis Retail Grocers' Association, praying for legislation that will tend to curtail or prohibit the production and sale of oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (H. R. 6801) granting a pension to Elander M. Mooneyhan.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2196) granting a pension to Dillian Vandeventer, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee to whom was referred the bill (S. 1904) granting a pension to Allen P. Jacobs, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 600) for the relief of the assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Patents; which was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 524) granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross;
A bill (H. R. 4332) granting a pension to William L. McCall;
A bill (H. R. 5100) granting a pension to Eleanor Foust; and A bill (H. R. 5692) for the relief of James B. Russell.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6519) granting a pension to John D. Krehbiel;
A bill (H. R. 5058) granting a pension to John Arthur;
A bill (H. R. 7108) granting a pension to Andrew J. Wilson;
A bill (H. R. 6639) granting a pension to Catharine Kennedy;
A bill (H. R. 4850) for the relief of William J. Hudson;
A bill (H. R. 6668) granting a pension to Lurena Wages;
A bill (H. R. 7109) granting a pension to Joseph Tuttle;
A bill (H. R. 3860) granting a pension to John H. Walters;
A bill (H. R. 5169) to increase the pension of Thomas J. Slayton;
A bill (H. R. 4808) granting a pension to William Field;
A bill (H. R. 5408) granting a pension to Josiah Focht;
A bill (H. R. 6150) for the relief of Euphemia R. Smith;
A bill (H. R. 2963) granting a pension to Louis Whorley; and
A bill (H. R. 5525) granting increase of pension to Robert E. Stephens.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6648) for the relief of Edmund M. Harrington;
A bill (H. R. 4782) granting a pension to Elizabeth McKay; and
A bill (S. 1459) granting an increase of pension to Walter A. Donaldson.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4685) for the relief of John A. Orndorff; and
A bill (H. R. 5406) granting a pension to Philip E. Raiger.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Turner C. Goodrum, of Moscow, Hickman County, Kentucky, praying to be allowed $100 additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2397) for the relief of Turner C. Goodrum; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7183) to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1341) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1243) for the relief of Frank G. Mix, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 5509) for the relief of St. Patrick's church, in the city of Washington, D. C.;

A bill (H. R. 7879) to amend the law relating to the bonds of executors in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 7880) to punish the advertising of lottery tickets in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1020) authorizing the District of Columbia to convey the alley, 15 feet wide, running east and west between lots 6 and 7, in square 635, comprising an area of 3,480 square feet of land, to the owner of said lots.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge, or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C., with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2398) granting a pension to George B. Baxter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2399) for the relief of Pay Clerk Charles Blake, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2400) for the relief of Paymaster James E. Tolfree, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 2401) to classify and fix the salaries of registers and receivers of United States land offices; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, introduced a bill (S. 2402) for the relief of Carrie P. Mackenheimer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2403) making an appropriation for the purpose of constructing and macadamizing a road from the city of Annapolis, in the State of Maryland, to the national cemetery near said city; and also a road leading from said national cemetery to the national naval cemetery near said city of Annapolis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2404) for the relief of the estate of Jacob P. Morse, late of Bath, Me., and Frederick A. Pike, sureties on the bond of Freeman H. Morse, late consul-general at London, England; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HEARST introduced a bill (S. 2405) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and its grantees; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2406) to relinquish and grant all interest which the United States now has in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and its grantees; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BERRY, Mr. BLAIR, Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, and Mr. SEWELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of John P. Walworth be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Sarah E. Hutchison and minor children be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. By request I submit a concurrent resolution, and ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the third annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission be printed, and that 25,000 additional copies be printed; of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the commission.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT LEWES, DEL.

Mr. CULLOM. If the routine morning business is concluded, I ask that the regular order be proceeded with.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to allow me to call up Senate bill 2256.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Delaware informs me that the objections to the bill which were made yesterday have been withdrawn. If that is the case, and it will only take the time necessary to pass the bill, I have no objection to allow it to be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent it will be taken up informally, subject to objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to know whether any communication from the Treasury Department has been made on that subject.

Mr. GRAY. A communication has been received, which is printed in the RECORD to-day.

Mr. HOAR. I merely wanted to have it accompany the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to say in relation to the bill that it was referred by the Committee on Commerce to myself as a subcommittee, and not only was there a communication from the Treasury Department, but after conference with the Treasury officers they all determined that this would not increase the expense of the service and that it is an absolute necessity.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a Senate bill returned from the House of Representatives with amendments. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C.

Mr. PLATT. Let the amendments be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are numerous amendments, that would not be understood by the mere reading.

Mr. PLATT. I withdraw the call.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I make whatever is the proper motion in relation to the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia, as the Chair understands, wishes the Senate to disagree to the amendments proposed by the House and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir, and I desire the Senate to allow me to make one statement as a reason for asking for a committee of conference.

I think that the House has possibly made a mistake in using the word "aqueduct" and omitting the words "the piers." There is a great difference between the acqueduct and the piers. Therefore I ask that there shall be a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. VANCE were appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 5509) for the relief of St. Patrick's church, in the city of Washington, D. C.;

A bill (H. R. 7879) to amend the law relating to the bonds of executors in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 7880) to punish the advertising of lottery tickets in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 6th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 506) for the relief of Emerson Etheridge and William B. Stokes; and

An act (S. 1377) to grant the right of way for railroad purposes through the lands of the United States powder depot near Dover, N. J., to the Morris County Railroad Company.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 7th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 135) granting a pension to Mary A. Tibbets; and

An act (S. 364) granting a pension to Nancy Battorf.

SPECIAL SESSION OF UTAH LEGISLATURE.

The PRESIDENT, pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The last general appropriation bill passed by the Legislature of Utah was vetoed by the then governor of that Territory. It made an appropriation of money for the support of the district courts of the Territory, including the pay of reporters, jurors, and witnesses, and for the completion and maintenance of the Deseret University and the education of the deaf mutes therein. It also appropriated for the support of the Territorial insane asylum, as well as the salaries of Territorial officers, including that of the superintendent of the district schools, the auditor, the librarian, and the treasurer of the Territory. It also provided for internal improvements, such as roads and bridges.

The appropriation for the district courts, for the payment of witnesses and jurors in criminal cases, was $40,000; that for the Deseret University and the deaf mutes was $66,000, and for the insane asylum $25,000.

The board of regents of the Deseret University have borrowed money for the completion of the university buildings which were authorized by legislative action, and which is now due and no provision made for the payment. The act appropriating for the benefit of the Territorial insane asylum passed by the Legislature was also vetoed. This included the sum of $73,000 which had been borrowed by the board of directors of the asylum for its completion and furnishing, and which now remains due and unpaid. It also included the sum of $3,548.85 for the care and maintenance of the indigent insane.

The Legislature of the Territory, under existing law, will not again convene for nearly two years, there being no authority for a special session. In the mean time, under present conditions, the good order of society will be jeopardized, educational and charitable institutions will be paralyzed, and internal improvements stopped until the Legislature meets and makes provision for their support.

A determination on the part of the General Government to suppress certain unlawful practices in this Territory demands neither the refusal of the means to support the local government nor the sacrifice of the interests of the community.

I therefore recommend the immediate enactment of such legislation as will authorize the assembling of the Legislature of that Territory in special session at an early day, so that provision can be made to meet the difficulties herein suggested.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 11, 1886.

STATUE OF LIBERTY ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By a joint resolution of Congress, approved March 3, 1877, the President was authorized and directed to accept the colossal statue of Liberty Enlightening the World when presented by the citizens of the French Republic, and to designate and set apart for the erection thereof a suitable site upon either Governor's or Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York, and upon the completion thereof to cause the statue "to be inaugurated with such ceremonies as will serve to testify the gratitude of our people for this expressive and felicitous memorial of the sympathy of the citizens of our sister republic."

The President was further thereby "authorized to cause suitable regulations to be made for its future maintenance as a beacon and for the permanent care and preservation thereof as a monument of art and the continued good-will of the great nation which aided us in our struggle for freedom."

Under the authority of this resolution, on the 4th day of July, 1884, the minister of the United States to the French Republic, by direction of the President of the United States, accepted the statue and received a deed of presentation from the Franco-American Union, which is now preserved in the archives of the Department of State.

I now transmit to Congress a letter to the Secretary of State from Joseph W. Drexel, esq., chairman of the executive committee of "the American committee on the pedestal of the great statue of 'Liberty Enlightening the World,'" dated the 27th of April, 1886, suggesting the propriety of the further execution by the President of the joint resolution referred to by prescribing the ceremonies of inauguration to be observed upon the complete erection of the statue upon its site on Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York.

Thursday, the 3d of September, being the anniversary of the signing of the treaty of peace at Paris by which the independence of these United States was recognized and secured, has been suggested by this committee under whose auspices and agency the pedestal for the statue has been constructed as an appropriate day for the ceremonies of inauguration.

The international character which has been imprinted upon this work by the joint resolution of 1877 makes it incumbent upon Congress to provide means to carry their resolution into effect.

Therefore I recommend the appropriation of such sum of money as in the judgment of Congress shall be deemed adequate and proper to defray the cost of the inauguration of this statue.

I have been informed by the committee that certain expenses have been incurred in the care and custody of the statue since it was deposited on Bedloe's Island, and the phraseology of the joint resolution providing for "the permanent care and preservation thereof as a monument of art" would seem to include the payment by the United States of the expense so incurred since the reception of the statue in this country.

The action of the French Government and people in relation to the presentation of this statue to the United States will, I hope, meet with hearty and responsive action upon the part of Congress, in which the Executive will be most happy to co-operate.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 11, 1886.

WEIL AND LA ABRA MINING COMPANY CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of State, dated the 6th instant, touching the claims of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Silver Mining Company against the Government of Mexico.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 11, 1886.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the unfinished business be now proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], and upon that amendment the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator from Maryland will permit me, as the utility of the amendment depends very much upon the text of the bill after it gets into the Senate, I would prefer to have it lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. I will withdraw it, and offer it again probably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, there are only one or two points to which I desire to refer since the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] has withdrawn his amendment, and that principally in answer to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN], who seemed to be under the impression that the fourth section of the bill as amended on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] would seriously interfere with the regulation of the through freights, to the detriment of the West.

When I was interrupted yesterday evening I was proceeding to show from a table prepared by Mr. Fink that the through rates from Chicago to New York are practically determined by the competition with the water ways; that the lakes and the Erie Canal for eight months in the year absolutely fix the rate of through freight. I hold in my hand that statement, which shows that in 1865 the rate of freight per hundred pounds from Chicago to New York was $1.60, while in 1884 it had been reduced to about 12 cents per hundred. The table shows that in 1884—and I need not go back, because the same proportion exists—in January and February, the rate was as high as 30 cents from Chicago. That was at a time when the Erie Canal was closed and water competition was impossible. As soon as the canal was opened in April the rate ran down to 15 cents, a point below the actual cost of the movement of the freight.

Mr. ALLISON. Below the actual cost?

Mr. GORMAN. Below the actual cost.

Mr. ALLISON. That is to say, a rate of 15 cents is below the actual cost, as Mr. Fink states?

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Fink states that the railroads can not profitably move 100 pounds of freight of the class of grain from Chicago to the city of New York for less than 20 cents per hundred pounds with profit to the railroad.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator repeat that information? I did not hear the name of the man.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Fink, who is the head of the railroad pool selected by the railroads to adjust all the controversies between them when they enter into their combinations, states that the rate of freight from Chicago to be profitable to the carrier must be about 20 cents per 100 pounds from Chicago to New York; that frequently it is below that to meet the canal rates always, but goes below the canal rates frequently when they are at war among themselves; but he says that the reduction below the proper amount which should be charged is not a reduction which benefits the producer in the West or the consumer in the East. I will call the attention of the Senate to his statement, which can be found on page 99 of the testimony. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] asked Mr. Fink this question:

Before you go to the question of what the remedy is, let me ask this: Who gets the benefit of this? Does the farmer get the benefit of it on his farm?

Mr. FINK. It is very difficult to trace that. In most instances the middlemen and speculators get it. When there is a long-settled reduction in rates, I suppose the farmer gets the advantage in a measure. When rates are reduced from Chicago to New York, the effect generally is that the parties who hold the grain in the West—the speculators and dealers in grain—get the advantage of the cut in the rate; but the farmer, if the reduced rates lasts long enough, gets some of the benefit.

It is perfectly clear that if this bill is passed with the fourth section as amended by the Senator from West Virginia it will have at least this effect, to compel the railroads to make a uniform rate between Chicago and the seaboard at such a rate that they can compete with the water transportation and with the Canadian roads, and place the grain and other products of the West in Liverpool and Cork to meet the competition of any other portion of the world.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] objects to it because he believes it would destroy that competition. That is natural, for the Senator from Massachusetts, looking at it as we all do more or less from our local standpoint, is overanxious to prevent embarrassment to such interests. He lives in a section of the country more remote from the great centers of the West than New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia, and unless the shippers at Boston can get a rate from the West less per ton per mile than Baltimore, New York, or Philadelphia you could not ship grain, and naturally Massachusetts wants to annihilate distance, to wipe out the 300 or 400 miles of extra transportation.

You have one advantage only, and that is that the cost of shipment from Boston to Liverpool and Cork is less than it is from New York, Baltimore, or any other seaport.

As to the question of differential rates, it is one which, as I have heretofore stated, has been considered by the railroad experts and managers themselves in their own interest. Baltimore is 185 miles nearer Chicago than New York, it is 349 miles nearer to Saint Louis, 304 miles nearer to Louisville, and 304 miles nearer to Cincinnati. The managers of that road, the citizens of Baltimore and who desired to share in the great trade of the West, have always held that as they were 300 miles nearer Cincinnati the rate of freight should not be so great as to New York; that the West was entitled to the benefit of that short distance. We are 200 miles farther from sea than New York. Therefore our rates of freight from Baltimore to Liverpool are on the average 2 cents a bushel more than from the city of New York. The difference ought to be made up naturally and properly in the reduced rates upon the Baltimore and Ohio short line to Chicago, Saint Louis, and Cincinnati.

This claim led to a great controversy, and three of the most eminent gentlemen in this country were selected by the railroads to determine that question, to determine whether it was proper to charge as much for a short haul as for a long haul. That commission consisted of the late Senator from Ohio, Mr. Thurman, Mr. Washburne of Illinois, and Judge Cooley, three of the most eminent men in this country. They determined that the short line should have the advantage of about 3 cents a hundred pounds on all the freight from the competing points in the west. The New York merchants complained of that action; and Mr. Fink and Mr. Blanchard, who represented all the railroad interests, were questioned and catechised by the merchants of New York, and what did they say in reply to the merchants of New York? Mr. Blanchard at the time represented the Erie Railroad, a competing railroad, whose terminus was in New York, and he in replying to the New York merchants who complained of this discrepancy against them, claiming, precisely as the Senator from Massachusetts does, that distance should be ignored and they should have the same rate per 100 pounds to New York as was charged to Baltimore—Mr. Blanchard said:

We are not called upon by any mercantile principle or usage to carry that extra distance for nothing, and there are no 272 miles of railroad that can be built for nothing, can be worked for nothing, that should be given to the public for nothing.

Mr. Fink stated that the actual difference in rate, the actual difference counting the mileage between Baltimore and Chicago or Cincinnati, should be 17½ cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. ALLISON. From what point? Will the Senator state again?

Mr. GORMAN. Taking Cincinnati as a basis.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the difference in distance? It is 304 miles, I think.

Mr. GORMAN. Three hundred and four miles. But Mr. Thurman, Judge Cooley, and Mr. Washburne, all three of them Western men, determined that the principle was right; but as a compromise 5½ cents per 100 pounds should be allowed, and that that would equalize the trade between these great centers.

Mr. Alexander, vice-president of the Louisville and Nashville road, when this subject was brought before him in the same controversy, said: "It is as communistic to rob any investment of that portion of its value due to location as of that due to cost;" by which he meant to say that it would be robbery to charge the same gross amount for a car-load over a road of 500 miles that you charged over a road of 1,000 miles.

During the course of this examination and while Mr. Fink was before us, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] brought to his attention a case, and it is only one of a thousand which are constantly occurring, of discrimination such as the bill provides shall not exist hereafter. Let me call the attention of the Senate to the statement of the chairman of the committee, who, I desire to say now, gave to this subject a consideration which I think very few members of this body have ever given, who considered it with a view of doing exact justice to all parts of this country, the West, the East, the North, and the South, to the shipper and to the railroads. He has, I believe, presented the fairest measure which has ever been framed in this country to regulate interstate commerce, one which I believe to-day is a great boon to the people and to the railroads, for it furnishes the machinery to advise the public of what the railroads are doing, and, as in the case of the New York commission, will result in adjusting innumerable complaints without a resort to the law.

The committee has given to the subject so much consideration and has been so fair that I have hesitated disagreeing with the committee in a single recommendation made. The only one that I did was in the case of the amendment offered by my friend from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. The chairman of the committee said to Mr. Fink, on page 103 of the testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think the action of the road on this state of facts is right?

Speaking about the discrimination on charges for short hauls. Said the chairman:

For instance, I know a case near my own town where a farmer had two farms, one on a road connecting with the Baltimore and Ohio road and another on a branch of the Central road, each about 25 miles from Springfield, where I live. The farmer had a lot of corn on each farm and he wanted to sell it about the time it was put up to 41 or 42 cents. An agent came along and said to him, "I will give you 41 cents for the corn out here on the Central road, because," he said, "I can ship it down to Springfield and ship it over the Ohio road to Baltimore or somewhere East." The farmer sold him that corn. Then the farmer said, "I have got some corn down here about 25 miles off on the Baltimore and Ohio road that is much nearer to Baltimore than is Springfield, and I would like to sell you that." The agent said, "I can not buy that and give you over 35 cents." The farmer would not sell it at that price. Now, this farmer asked one of the directors of the Baltimore and Ohio road why that was? He said, "Why, they could make arrangements with the branch of the Illinois Central to bring your corn down to Springfield and take it on their road, which would be so much gain, but the corn down on our road is our meat anyhow."

Twenty-five miles nearer Baltimore, Mr. Fink said:

That is certainly a case of unjust discrimination, and I am glad you mentioned it, as it shows exactly the cause of unjust discrimination and the way it should be remedied. Springfield being a competing point, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, no doubt, reduced the established and agreed rate at that point in order to take this business away from some other road.

Now, I submit, Mr. President, that a case like this ought to be corrected by legislation. It can only be done by such a provision as we have adopted in the fourth section. I know of my own knowledge that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is not alone in this, but all the railroads of the country more or less indulge in it.

I have known of a shipment of grain to be made from Chicago to the city of Cumberland, 184 miles west of here; it is compelled to be billed through to the city of Baltimore, the through rate being paid, and then it was placed upon a vessel and sent 200 miles down the Chesapeake Bay and up the Potomac River to Georgetown, and then by canal 184 miles to Cumberland, saving to the shipper very largely upon the rate that would have been charged him if the goods had been billed from Chicago to Cumberland, notwithstanding the fact that it came through upon one of the through trains that stopped at Cumberland, and could have been detached from the train and left there without the expense of a haul to the railroad, at the same amount he would have been glad to pay. It is billed through to the city of Baltimore. Outrages of this sort are of every-day occurrence, and no railroad man justifies them.

The Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] complained yesterday that shippers frequently take advantage of the railroads by getting through rates and then sending the goods back two or three hundred miles at local rates. There is no reason for it, and no man can defend it whether he be a shipper or a manager of a railroad. Why should not the same gross rate be charged, saving the haul and the wear and tear of his cars 184 miles?

Interfere with trade to the West! Why, Mr. President, it is true that a railroad operated as one of these trunk lines is must receive a gross amount to pay its running expenses, the interest on its bonded debt, and a fair dividend upon its stock. No expert in this country will tell you that that can not be done with this provision in, with the discretion left to the commission in certain cases to make a different rule without increasing one penny on the freight charges from Chicago to the seaboard.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] complained yesterday very bitterly that the Senator from West Virginia had declared that what he wanted to accomplish was the same rate per car, the same gross weight per ton, from the Ohio River at Petersburg or at Parkersburg on a cargo of grain as from Chicago to Baltimore or New York. If that was the demand of the Senator from West Virginia, why should he not have it? It will not increase your rate from the West. It does not interfere with you a particle. All he asks is that he shall pay the same amount per car from Parkersburg to Baltimore, less than 400 miles, that you pay for 900 from Chicago to the same point of delivery. Is it not fair and liberal on the part of the Senator from West Virginia that he does not demand any more than to be placed on an equality with you without the slightest advantage? At Wheeling, on the Ohio River, there is competition. It is practically the same distance from Baltimore and Philadelphia to Wheeling as to Parkersburg. A few miles lower down the Ohio River there happens to be no railroad competition at Parkersburg, but the people at Wheeling get better rates than you do from Chicago to Baltimore, while Parkersburg, simply because of its not having a competing railroad, has to pay as great a rate for 400 as you pay for 900 miles.

Mr. President, the State of Kansas has been referred to. Its rates to the seaboard are governed by the rates from Chicago to tide water. So of the State of Iowa. You are compelled practically to pay the local rates to Saint Louis or to Chicago, and therefore you have—and I have no doubt to a greater extent because it is comparatively a new country—more extortions of this sort than in any other section of the Union. It would benefit your people as much as the people of West Virginia; it would compel your railroads to give you fair rates upon all your freight between the points in your States and the city of Chicago, and when you reach there, as I before said, the competition of the water lines and the Canadian roads regulates your through rates.

Mr. President, I do not care to continue this discussion. I should not have said a word except for the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I offer an amendment to section 2, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 2:

And any person or persons who shall, directly or indirectly, apply for or knowingly accept, in any manner not authorized by this act, any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other form of reduction of rate, the allowance of which is prohibited by this section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not less than $200 for each offense.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, section 2 proposes to establish a rule of public policy with reference to the transportation interests of this country, and it provides:

That if any common carrier shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Allow me to ask whether the Senator would not change the penalty of $200 to $2,000?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let me get through with my explanation—or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

That is the rule established. Then the bill proposes to enforce that rule by penal sanctions which are provided for in section 7, which section provides:

That any common carrier who shall willfully do, cause to be done, or permit to be done any of the acts, matters, or things in this act declared to be unlawful shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within whose jurisdiction such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 for each offense.

The purpose of my amendment is to apply to the shippers who ask for or knowingly receive the rebate or other favor which the bill proposes shall not be granted by a common carrier; in other words, to break up the system of favoritism at both ends, both as to its being granted by the carrier and as to its being asked for and knowingly received by the shipper. It seems to me that the rule will be imperfect without making the amendment which I have proposed.

Now, then, as to the question propounded by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I think, if I may be allowed a word with the permission of the Senator from Iowa, that $200 is a very small assessment for violating the law as against a railroad corporation.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This is not against a railroad corporation.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I think that while we count that money as very large, the corporation would rather give up the money for misdemeanors in the way of fines than to have their persons put in a station-house or in jail; but I would make that $200 $2,000, and I think they would have more respect for the law.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator misapprehends the amendment. It has no application to a railroad company at all. It applies to the person doing business with a railroad company as a shipper.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I understood that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The provision in section 7 with reference to the fine would impose a fine of not more than $5,000 for each offense on the railroad company. The amendment which I offer would impose a fine of not less than $200 for each offense on each shipper violating the provisions of the law. It must be remembered that many of these transactions are of comparatively small volume on the part of the shipper. The rule is violated in the greater respects by the carrier. The purpose of my amendment is simply to provide a reasonable penalty against shippers who request or knowingly receive the favors that the second section declares shall not be granted by railroad companies in future.

Mr. CULLOM. I am inclined to take it for granted that any man who is in favor of any legislation at all on this subject that is of any public utility will not favor the amendment. It substantially puts the whole public on trial for the mere acceptance of lower rates, whether the man knows what the published rates are or not, on account of a request that he may make for a rate below what the published rates are. It does seem to me that if we want to pass any law on this subject at all, we are not going to put the whole people on trial when they are dealing with these corporations, which are public corporations, and ought to know their duty and do it, whether the shipper requests a lower rate or not.

I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Illinois does not comprehend the amendment in its true character. It provides a penalty against the shipper who shall knowingly receive the favor.

Mr. CULLOM. If a man is guilty of accepting, presumably he knows it is against the law, because the law exists.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But the Senator certainly knows that an information or indictment based upon that amendment, if it should become a part of the law, must aver that the acceptance was knowingly done.

Mr. CULLOM. I am aware of that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. And when an allegation of that kind is required to be placed in an indictment or information, it must be sustained by proofs.

Mr. CULLOM. That may be true. Whether the one statement or the other is true in reference to the law, so far as I am concerned I am unwilling to ingraft any amendment upon this bill that raises a presumption against the mass of people who do business with railroads that they are guilty of a wrong because they go to a railroad agent and ask for a lower rate than the published rates which the railroad company have announced as proper.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I think there is a distinction to be observed between a railroad corporation or its officers and the private citizen doing business with the railroad or its officers as to whether a certain act should be declared to be criminal or not.

We deal with railroads and other common carriers, especially with railroads, upon certain theories; and the right to regulate a railroad corporation in its charges to my mind rests upon this principle: When authority is given to it to construct and operate its road the duties of the Government are delegated to it. I think that is the foundation principle on which we seek to control and regulate railroads in their charges. It is the duty of the Government to provide these means of intercommunication for passengers and traffic. The Government shifts that duty onto a corporation at the request of individuals, and the corporation assumes the duties of the people when it takes the charter or the franchise; and therefore we have a right to hold the corporation to the performance of the duty as the State would perform it.

No railroad, in my judgment, has a right to say that it may conduct its business as a private citizen conducts his business, without reference to legislation and without reference to charges as to whether they be extortionate or discriminative; but with a private individual it is entirely different. A private individual has a right, as it seems to me, to do his business upon the best terms he can, and while perhaps he ought not to go to a railroad company and ask a rate lower than it gives to another, I think it is going very far to say that where he does do it in the transaction of his own private business he shall be subject to a criminal charge.

That is the distinction which I would make, and that is the reason why I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] a few days ago, in making some remarks on the subject then under consideration, stated that possibly the greatest evil connected with the transportation system of this country was favoritism, and his remark was true.

Now, there is scarcely a railroad station in this country where general business is transacted, where the rights and interests of numbers of men are not interfered with by favoritism going to the benefit of some particular individual in the given community. So all over the land you have men, because these special favors are granted, doing business and making an annual profit satisfactory to them, resulting merely from the advantages they have under the favoritism extended. One man can conduct the grain business, for instance, at a way station upon a given line of railroad, and he can make money in that business, while all other men in the community engaged in that business lose money and are driven out of it, not because they are not as competent to conduct the business as the one who succeeds, but because the favoritism extended to that individual not granted to others makes up the profit necessary to make him a successful business man. Hence I desire to prevent that in all the communities of the land; and if we are to establish a rule of public policy declaring it to be a crime upon the part of the carriers to practice this rule of favoritism, let us also say that those who knowingly receive the favors shall also be guilty. But I make the distinction between the carrier and the individual in the character of the penalty that may be imposed.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, it seems to me that the proposition of the Senator from Iowa might be illustrated by a law which I think is passed in almost all States or by municipal corporations, that no man shall sell gunpowder without a license. That is put on the ground of public policy. But would the Senator, for the purpose of carrying out that public policy, make it criminal for a man to go to a person who he knew had not a license to sell gunpowder, and ask him to sell him some gunpowder? I think he would hesitate about making that a penal offense when he would not hesitate on the ground of public policy about making it a criminal or penal offense to sell gunpowder without a license. I think that illustrates the case very well.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment as it is drawn is impracticable and vague, and it would be difficult for any court to give it a construction by which it could be reasonably well enforced. A man who accepts a rebate accepts a discount. It is a popular phrase; and what does it mean? Suppose, for instance, the rates of freight from Chicago to Boston are fixed by the railroad companies at a certain amount in order that the traffic shall not go through Canada, shall not go over some other line, shall not go to New York. That is the railroad rule. What is a man in Boston or a shipper in Chicago to do under this amendment? He does not accept any money; he has not had a thing delivered to him like the shipper does who receives the freight. He has gone to a railroad corporation, ascertained the freights from one point to another, and he has paid all that is charged. He has not literally accepted anything; he has accepted a rebate or accepted a discount; but he has really merely paid the current regular price. How is that man to be indicted under the amendment? I do not see. There is one phrase in it, "apply for," that might possibly be practicable.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If he can not be indicted the amendment will certainly not hurt him. It is only intended for those who come within the terms of its provisions.

Mr. HOAR. My honorable friend is too eminent a lawyer and jurist, I think, to stand by that answer to my suggestion on a little reflection. When we are asked to legislate in a matter affecting the interests of this country to the extent of thousands of millions of dollars, when we are asked to put in a penal section to govern the conduct of all the persons who dispatch freight by railroads or carriers, and it is pointed out that the thing we are asked to do is totally nugatory, the answer is that if it is nugatory it does not hurt anybody. It is not certainly a satisfactory answer to my mind. I do not think we ought to pass enactments that will be met by the answer simply that they will be nugatory.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. To make it more definite, then, I need but repeat that the second section declares that no "common carrier shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property" than they demand or receive from others. That is to be the rule of public policy with reference to the carriage of freight in this country, and that is enforced by the penal sanctions contained in section 7. My amendment now proposes to give greater force to this rule of public policy by prohibiting shippers from requesting these carriers to violate the provisions of the law, or from knowingly accepting the benefits which may arise therefrom; so that any shipper who requests the carrier to violate the law, which is pronounced to be a criminal act, or one who knowingly accepts a benefit arising upon that violation, shall be punishable.

Mr. HOAR. Now if the Senator will pardon me, that is the part in his amendment to which my criticism was directed. The Senator is in Chicago and he sends to a railroad 1,000 barrels of flour to go to Boston, and the railroad according to its established arrangement with Boston charges him a certain sum, makes him out a bill. If he simply pays his bill and goes his way, is he criminal or is he indictable unless he goes and tenders to that railroad company a certain additional sum where it charges other people more?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If that shipper knowingly receives directly or indirectly the advantage of that reduction of rate given to him against other shippers of the country, he can be indicted.

Mr. HOAR. Just take a practical case, if my friend will pardon me. If he goes to a tailor and orders a coat he is to be indicted and convicted because the tailor charges him $10 when he ought to have charged $15. I can not see how any such indictment could be framed which would not result in absurdity. In other words, the phrase which my honorable friend uses, "receiving a benefit," is a mere trope. What the man has done is that he has failed to pay a dollar more for something he purchased. That is all. It is not any receipt of anything. He has simply not paid this additional dollar which the Senator says he ought to have paid. I can understand that the man who asks for a lower rate has done an act for which he should be, if we think proper, indicted and punished. That is not my criticism. But to say that a man is indictable for receiving a benefit when all that he has done is to pay what is to him the regular price, or to his town the regular price, I can not understand.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Well, Mr. President, I do not know that discussion between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself can settle this; but if this shall become a law and the Senator from Massachusetts will do the thing hereby prohibited, I will undertake to prepare an indictment against him and convict him on it.

Mr. HOAR. Well!

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think it would be a practical illustration of the efficiency of this proposed amendment.

Now, it may be that the Senate is in no temper to adopt this amendment; but if this bill shall become a law, mark my prediction now made, that no considerable time will have passed until you will have abundant evidence of the mistake of not adopting this amendment. And even though this may be voted down, it is my purpose to put the danger-signals along the line, to offer another and like amendment to the third section, so that when the time comes when you will discover the necessity for this it shall not be said that it was not proposed because of any failure on my part to discover the necessity and to offer to provide for it.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the amendment will be voted on and voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, obtained the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator will indulge me a minute. As the yeas and nays were not called on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa and just voted on, I desire to put on record that I would have voted for and did vote for the amendment. The amendment, I believe, is one which prevents a construction of this bill which would legalize as much charge for a short haul as for a long haul.

Mr. CULLOM. Oh, no. The amendment just voted on by the Senate, offered by the Senator from Iowa, has reference to an entirely different subject.

Mr. GEORGE. Then my remarks were meant to apply to that amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senate evidently is not in a temper to support the views I have expressed; but in order to place myself right on the record in connection with this legislation, knowing, as I think I do, that if this bill shall pass and become a law we shall soon discover not only the propriety but the necessity for some such legislation as I have proposed, I now offer an amendment to the third section of like effect, not intending to discuss it.

I move to add to section 3 the following words:

> Any person or persons who shall directly or indirectly apply for or knowingly accept any favor, preference, or advantage declared by this section to be unlawful shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not less than $200 for each offense.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that amendment will be voted down as was the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment to the bill which I have already submitted.

The amendment was read.

Mr. MORGAN. After the word "property," where it occurs near the beginning of the amendment, I desire to insert "or the United States mail."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what he means by "unlawful conspiracy?"

Mr. MORGAN. Conspiracy to violate the law.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I know; but why "unlawful" as a prefix?

I should not know how to get at that unless we made a statute to fit the offense.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the language be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read again.

The amendment was read as modified, as follows:

Insert as an additional section:

"SEC. —. That if two or more persons, with the intent to prevent the movement or running of any locomotive, car, or train of cars used, or that is about to be used, in carrying passengers or property, or the United States mail, to or from one State to another, or to or from any Territory of the United States, or to or from any foreign country, or to or from any Indian tribe, shall conspire together, or agree together, or unite with a common intent unlawfully to obstruct or prevent the movement or running of any such train, car, or locomotive, or the loading or unloading of any such car or train of cars, or to put in peril the personal security of any officer or employé of any railroad company engaged in moving or running, loading or unloading, such car or train of cars, such persons so offending shall be guilty of unlawful conspiracy, and, on conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, shall be punished for each such offense by imprisonment for not exceeding six months, and by a fine not exceeding $500, one or both, as the court trying the case shall direct."

Mr. MORGAN. The persons so offending are guilty of unlawful conspiracy. That is a phrase that I think is pretty common in statutes in defining a penal offense. Perhaps it might be sufficient to say "shall be guilty of conspiracy." I have no particular desire to have the language in the form in which I have introduced it. If the Senator or if the Senate thinks the word "unlawful" is redundant, of course it makes no difference to me if that word shall go out. Does the Senator from Virginia desire to strike it out?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I think so. Conspiracy itself is not always unlawful.

Mr. MORGAN. Not always.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It only makes a little more trouble when the case comes into court. I think "unlawful" ought to be stricken out.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be modified by striking out the word "unlawful."

Mr. VEST. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the language ought to cover this District as well as the rest of the country.

Mr. MORGAN. I will accept that suggestion also.

Mr. CULLOM. I am very anxious to hear what Senators say, but I am unable to hear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What line does the Senator from Missouri desire to amend?

Mr. VEST. The fifth line, after the words "United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By inserting "or to or from the District of Columbia."

Mr. VEST. "To or from any Territory of the United States, or to or from the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the modification proposed? It will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That if two or more persons, with the intent to prevent the movement or running of any locomotive, car, or train of cars used, or that is about to be used, in carrying passengers or property or the United States mail to or from one State to another, or to or from any Territory of the United States, or to or from the District of Columbia, or to or from any foreign country, or to or from any Indian tribe, shall conspire together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. MORGAN. The proposition contained in this amendment would be a sound constitutional proposition if it stood in a law by itself without any attempted interference with the manner of running trains or controlling the conduct either of shippers or of persons engaged as common carriers. I will illustrate in reference to our commerce with foreign countries. Any two persons who might conspire to prevent the importation of goods through a certain port, or the exportation of goods from a certain port, or who might conspire to disable any vessel engaged in such foreign commerce, would clearly be amenable to punishment under the laws of the United States, and could be brought within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States for an offense like that. Our laws could certainly be extended, under the Constitution, to include that class of offenses.

Aside from all questions concerning the regulation of transportation between the States and foreign countries over railroads, this is a necessary provision of law. It is one that is not found in the statute-book so far as I am advised, but it ought to be there for the sake of giving to our commerce entire freedom, freedom from interference, from interruption by any persons who might desire to obstruct it for any cause whatever.

The effort of Congress in this bill is to control interstate transportation of goods and passengers; and that effort, so far as it tends to liberalize or secure freedom to commerce between the States from any embarrassing disadvantages, has my entire sympathy. But all the provisions of this bill look toward the protection of the people against the power of corporations. None of them look to the protection of the carriers. I am free to admit that the exercise of certain powers, monopolistic in their character, by the corporations for so long a period of time and in such an extraordinary way, has built up a necessity for some interference on the part of the proper government, whatever that is, to correct evils that seem to be beyond the control of mere private authority or power. The States exercising their jurisdiction over the subject, or the Congress of the United States to the extent that it has any powers, it appears, must intervene to protect persons against monopoly and against the abuse of corporate privileges which have been granted by the States and sometimes by the Federal Government to these great railroad establishments.

All the debate in this case and indeed all the debate that has been had in Congress now for several years on kindred topics has related to the protection of the shipper, or the person who is concerned in having commerce transported between the States and to foreign countries, and the whole weight of the argument has been thrown in favor of the idea that only the shipper and the producer and the manufacturer, the persons who patronize the railroad companies, have any rights of protection at the hands of Congress. I think, Mr. President, that now, while we have got the subject in hand, it is our duty to do justice to all persons concerned. It is especially our duty to do justice to the general peace and welfare of the people of the United States.

We are not here, I hope, for the purpose of indulging merely in class legislation for the purpose of holding one class down by the power of the law while another class may be permitted to go entirely free from all penalty, from all control, from all liability to damage for whatever they may do contrary to good morals or the principles of justice toward the bailees to whom goods may be confided for transportation.

Above all things else, it should be the care and the cheerful duty of Congress, to the extent of all the power it possesses, to see that the commerce of this country, and the travel of men back and forth between these States, should be kept entirely free from any criminal interference. No conspiracy or combination, I care not what may be the provoking cause or how serious may be the evil which has invoked such action, may be, can be justified or tolerated by the laws of the United States or sheltered under the action of Congress. If we undertake to pass laws on the subject at all, and entirely forget our duty in respect to such matters, we shall be held to a just and severe accountability by the people.

If we are to control this subject in any sense whatever, let us do it for the general welfare of the people of the United States, and not for the benefit of a particular class, and not for the purpose of holding in check a certain class of corporations or persons who may be engaged in the carrying trade between the States, while we permit others by our non-interference to obstruct and prevent them from doing their duty as common carriers.

The right of the people of these States to have a perfectly free and unembarrassed commerce between themselves relating both to the transportation of goods and passengers is perhaps the most important right that they now enjoy. I think more wealth, more power, more growth, and more prosperity have come from the entire freedom of commerce between the States than from any other one cause of a political or commercial character that can possibly be mentioned. Without it we should have been a set of isolated, segregated commonwealths, each vying with the other in its efforts at mastery in the control of commerce to the detriment of the others, and each trying in that way to break down the general prosperity of the country.

Now, whatever makes commerce free, whatever makes it secure, whatever removes from it any embarrassment of crime or improper interference, whether by a railroad company, or by a mob, or by a combination or conspiracy of individuals, is something that Congress, if it has the power, ought to take in hand and to regulate and control for the benefit of the people and for the peace and the general welfare of this country.

Our duty in this direction is quite as clear as it is to regulate the rights of shippers as to the cost and conditions of transportation.

We can not abdicate a duty of that kind at this present moment without drawing upon ourselves the censure of that vast body of people who are concerned in the freedom of commerce. Take all the great body of agriculturists in this country, the miners who ship the heavy products of the mines of iron and coal, the timber dealers, and in fact every other class of producers that you can name, with all the productions they contribute to commerce, and let it be understood that mobs can assemble in different cities or in different places in the United States, can interfere to prevent the running of railway trains that have upon them passengers or the United States mails or the commerce which these producers load upon the trains, and that Congress while dealing with a question of this kind has abdicated its power, has neglected and refused even to consider the question of the protection of this commerce against these persons, what must be the severity of the criticism that these people would have the right and would necessarily bring to bear upon our conduct on this occasion?

I know that in advocating this amendment I put myself in opposition to a very powerful sentiment existing among a certain class of people in this country, which has expressed itself in various violent movements, and which has asserted on its own behalf the right to interrupt at its pleasure the transmission of commerce between these States and foreign countries. I know the power of that sentiment, but I believe that almost every man concerned in it, certainly every American-born citizen, when he comes to consider what may be the results of such conduct in reference to the peace and prosperity of this country, will himself sustain the principles of this amendment and admit the necessity of its adoption. He will see that it is the duty of Congress to prevent combinations and conspiracies from exercising their power against the freedom of commerce in this country. The mature reflection and the better judgment of even the men who have been concerned in obstructing commerce, and have been provoked into these combinations heretofore by the extortions and excesses of the railroad companies, will sustain our action if we will show that in wisdom and with due respect to all of their rights we intend that the commerce of this country shall be protected against interference by criminal combinations, and they will support us in our efforts; but whether they do or not, it is our duty to put this law upon the statute-book and, in connection with this bill in which we are attempting to control the extortions of the railroad companies, we ought to show to the whole country that we are even-handed in our efforts at justice, that we want to have commerce free from trammel and without embarrassment, and free from monopoly, and that no set of men in the United States shall be permitted to oppress the people or to interfere with and to destroy commerce or to check it and prevent its free access to all the different parts of our country over our railroads and our rivers, and to foreign countries also.

I need not elaborate this amendment at all. It is a very plain thing. Senators will have no difficulty in understanding its bearings, and I think they will have no trouble in understanding its necessity. The occasion of putting it upon the bill is an appropriate one, and I hope the Senate will not hesitate to do it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have sympathy with the Senator from Alabama in desiring a measure which shall secure the country against a repetition of the recent labor trouble. I sincerely hope—and I trust every Senator agrees with me—that labor may be elevated in the United States, that the men who work at daily toil for their daily bread may receive the uttermost farthing which can be honestly earned by them. I believe they have a right to that, and a right to organize and to protect themselves legitimately under the law against I will not say the encroachments of capital, but the abuses which have grown out of the enormous aggregations of capital in certain hands in the United States. While I have all this sympathy with that class of people from my past life and association, at the same time I deprecate as a Senator and as an individual all excesses which in the name of labor attack the rights of property. But that is not the question before the Senate.

The amendment of the Senator from Alabama goes much further, and it attacks what I conceive to be a fundamental principle of the Constitution of the United States and of the laws of this country. It is not with me a political question. I believe that every sound thinker on our Constitution knows that all offenses against the rights of property within the States should be determined by the States. I do not believe that the Constitution gave to the Federal Government the power to arrest and punish individuals for offenses committed against the States and not against the Federal authority. If any individual attacks the property of another or of a corporation, which is a person within the eye of the law, and that offense is committed within the jurisdiction of a State, that State can and ought to punish it; and for us to declare here that this legislation is necessary for the National Government is a confession that the States are powerless within the sphere given them by the Constitution, and in that far it destroys my idea of the fundamental principle on which the Constitution is based.

Now, sir, the experiences within the past few weeks have shown us that the States are competent to manage this matter. Within my own State, where the greatest excesses seem to have been committed, wherever an appeal has been made by the railroad authorities to municipal or State law they have met with a prompt response and ample redress. There has not been one single case in which the authorities of the State and of the municipalities have not been used to move railroad trains and protect the property of the companies. Why, then, introduce now this new and in my judgment unconstitutional method, saying to the General Government, "You can go into the States," when the States are ample in all provisions of law to protect property? Once open this door, and the jurisdiction of the States and the State authorities and the State courts is absolutely destroyed. There will not be a single attack on property or a violation of personal rights where the first recourse will not be had to the National Congress. As I said before, the distinctions and the limitations provided by the National Constitution will be swept away. For this reason I shall certainly vote against this amendment or any kindred proposition.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am in favor of the sentiment of this amendment, and were this the legislative body of the State of which I am a citizen and were I a member of that body, I should not hesitate to vote for it.

While it can not be denied that every laborer has the right to discontinue his labor whenever he sees fit, it must be admitted by everybody that his right to interfere with the running of trains or the transaction of any business in which he may have formerly been employed does not follow as a logical sequence of his right to quit. I think that the interference of armed men for the purpose of stopping the commerce of the country is a crime against the State and one that ought to be punished. I have no sympathy with the people who go beyond legal and constitutional methods for what they call a redress of their wrongs. But, as has been suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], it seems to me that this is a question which should be left entirely to the States until such time at least as the States shall signify in a constitutional and proper manner their inability to enforce the law. Every State in the Union I presume without exception has a statute, if not of this character in words, at least containing this principle. The destruction of property is punished in every State in the Union by indictment or by some other method.

The State of Illinois lying across the great lines that cross the continent, the State of Missouri, and other States of that character are charged by law and by the system of government under which we live with the maintenance of order in those States, with the protection of person and property in those States; and I do not believe it is the duty of the General Government under the plea of protecting the commerce of the country to step in and do what from the organization of the country to the present time has been conceded by all right-thinking men to be the duty of each State itself.

I had occasion a few days since to express my opinion on the question of national interference in the police affairs of the State. I have had occasion to do it more than once as a member of the Senate. I repeat again it is for the State to deal with disorder; it is for the State to protect its lines of road; it is for the State to protect its citizens; it is for the State to keep open the highways of commerce in the first instance; and when the State says it can not do it longer, then there is a constitutional method by which the General Government may and must interfere on application in the proper mode. I can not see why if it is called upon to interfere in this case in this way, we might not interfere in every other case of violence in a State. It might be put under the "general welfare" clause. There could be reasons found somewhere to justify Federal interference in almost every instance that can be imagined.

I do not deny that it is possible to pass a law of this character that would be constitutional. I suppose the right to regulate commerce must in the nature of things include the right to prevent commerce; but it is only in extreme cases that the Federal Government would be justified in attempting this, if at all.

There has been recently in the city of Chicago a strike growing out of the labor question. Whether the demand that was made by the employés or the employers was right or wrong is not the question now to be discussed. Violence was resorted to, and a state of anarchy existed for a few hours in the city of Chicago. The mayor of the city, I understand from the public press, succeeded in quelling the riot with the aid of the people of his city, without even calling on the governor of the State to interfere by armed military force. If the people of Chicago had called on the General Government, and the General Government had responded to the call with a regiment of troops, then every man in the city of Chicago would have felt himself absolved from any obligation in the premises. I said the other day that this calling upon the National Government was intended to, and would in the end, absolve the people of the locality from the obligation that they owe to protect their fellows in their community. It builds up a system under which the people of this country feel that they are not a part and parcel of the Government when that they speak of the Government of the United States as an entity, a being beyond them, and in which they have neither part, parcel, nor lot. I can remember when every man in the United States felt that he himself was a part of the Government, and he never spoke of the Government as a being out of and beyond him.

As long as this Government confines itself to national affairs, the people will feel their responsibility at home, and they will recognize the fact that in the towns in which they live it is their duty as townsmen to first keep the peace of the town; and enlarging their borders, it is their duty as citizens of the county to keep the peace of the county; and enlarging their borders further, as citizens of the State it is their duty to keep the peace within the State; and going further, it is their duty to keep the peace within the nation whenever the confusion shall become so great as to require national interference, and only then.

I said the other day that whenever the man who went out to set fire to a train or to stay its progress felt that he would be brought in contact with the man who sold him his groceries and who sold him his clothing and with whom he sat in church on the Sabbath day if he was a churchman, then he would realize the responsibility of his act and then he would be loath to proceed; but when he understands that a power beyond and away from him comes in to interfere, then he feels that his neighbors are not condemning his act and his neighbors are not the parties interested in keeping the peace. I oppose this because it puts upon the National Government what I say first of all should be the duty of the city where the first trouble begins, and then of the county, and next of the State; therefore I am opposed to its adoption by the General Government.

I repeat again, not having any sympathy with the men who commit violence, not wishing to have it understood for a moment that I desire to excuse them, or that I curry or ask their favor or their support by my opposition—putting it upon an entirely different ground, a ground that I think lies at the foundation of the existence of this Government, to commence at home with individual responsibility, that every man
